THOMAS PATRICK HUGHES, B.D. M.R.A.S.

Fellow of the Punjab University, Missionary of the Church Missionary Society, Peshawur, Afghanistan.

"We have at last obtained a real encyclopædia of the Mul ammadan Religion, and we can only hope that the stelling value of the result of so much labour and study will receive its well-merited recognition."—Literary Wo. ld.

"An excellent service has been rendered by Mr. Hughes in compiling this Dictionary of Islam to all those who have dealings with Moslems, Islam, or the literature of the Arabs; and the volume before us, as the work of one man, is a marvel of industry, and fatrly to be characterised as a cyclopedia of the doctrines, rites, ceremonies, and customs; together with the technical and theological terms of the Muhammedan religion."—Saturday Review.

"Mr. Hughes' competency for his task can fully be judged only by those as familiar with Muhammadanism as he is himself. He indicates great care and sound judgment. . . . We have read many of its articles with great interest."—British Quarterly Review.

"The work is unique of its kind, and invaluable to all who live in, or love the East."—Daily Telegraph.

"In the 750 pages of his present work he gives an exact explanation of every term, action, and idea of the Mussalman faith, the information being in every case taken from the most esteemed Muhammadan sources, with the comments of the best European scholars. . . . This most useful work will be of undoubted value to he student of comparative religion."—Homeward Mail.

"VOICE OF INDIA."

A MAGAZINE THAT GIVES EXPRESSION TO THE PUBLIC OPINION OF THE PEOPLE OF

THERE are in England large classes willing and anxious to do justice to India, but they find it very difficult to know how to act. They complain that Indian questions are intricate; that the opinions of official experts are contradictory; and that the people of India are dumb, and do not give expression to their needs. This defect is now remedied by publishing MONTHLY (in Bombay) a magazine somewhat similar in nature to Public Opinion in England, which provides a compendium of all that is most valuable in the native journals throughout India on the leading topics of the day. The Voice of India thus gives forth a clear sound, interpreting between the rulers and the ruled, and making known the true wishes and feelings of the Indian people.

The Magazine advocates no views of its own. It seeks only to reflect with care and accuracy the views set forth in the native press. The Indian people are naturally docile and consorvative; and it will be seen that the writings thus brought before the English public are characterised by a knowledge of facts, and generally by practical good sense and moderation. No doubt grievances are from time to time being set forth; but it is a policy of prudence, no less than of justice to give these grievances a fair constitutional hearing. Accordingly, it is hoped that this publication will be subscribed for by Members of Parliament and other public men desirous of dealing with Indian questions, and that the facts thus brought together in a convenient form will be of value to journalists and other public writers. It is specially desired to bring the Magazine before the public in Clubs, Reading-rooms, Libraries, and Institutes throughout England, with a view to promote a sustained and intelligent interest in the welfare of our Indian Empire, comprising as it does 220 millions of our fellow-subjects.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 4, 1886.

General Intelligence.

[By Overland Mail.]

THE Overland Mail brings us letters and advices from Bombay to the 17th August; from Allahabad to the 15th August; and from Calcutta and Madras to the 14th August.

THE Government of India are taking up the work of the pacification of Burma in earnest. Eleven regiments and two Mountain Batteries have been ordered to reach Burma by October 20th. The British regiments are the 2nd Queen's, the 1st South Yorks, and the 2nd Munster Fusiliers.

Part of the general plan for the cold weather operations in Burma is that a division shall operate from the Manipur side, under the command of General John Gordon, now in charge of the Eastern Frontier District. Additional brigades will be formed in Upper Burma, owing to the increased number of troops in the field; and Colonel Lockhart will probably be offered one such command.

Some questionings seem to have arisen regarding the command of the Madras Army if General Macpherson assumes the direction of military operations in Burma. But there will be no necessity for appointing anyone to officiate. The situation will be the same as if the local Commander-in-Chief were on tour, Burma being within the Madras commad.

SANCTION has been accorded to the raising of a local levy in Upper Burma from the tribesmen of the Magound District to the north-west of Bhamo.

DURING the week ending the 8th August Bhamo and the frontier were reported quiet. The districts of Sagaing, Shweach, Yen and Pagan are undisturbed. The revenue is coming in satisfactorily in Shwebo. Kyaukse is quiet. Mandalay town and the district are fairly quiet.

THERE has been a successful expedition to clear out some dacoit villages near the capital of Ava.

THE situation in Myingyan and Mimbu are unchanged.

THE Salen garrison had a successful encounter with the insurgents, in which Captain Atkinson unfortunately was killed.

REINFORCEMENTS are being sent to Myingyan and Yemethen districts, where several gangs of dacoits are reported.

LIEUTENANT HUGGINS has gone in pursuit of Hla Oo to the north of Shwaybo.

In the defeat recently inflicted by Lieutenant Huggins on Hla Oo, the dacoits lost 150 men.

LATER on there was another engagement, when several prisoners were made, and twenty carts of property belonging to the dacoits were captured.

MAJOR AUCHINLECH, with thirty Scots Fusiliers and thirty Burmans, has had a fight with the celebrated dacoit leader Bo Sweh on the western frontier. Bo Sweh took refuge in the jungle. Our casualities were Colour-Sergeant Gilles and Privates Kennedy and Barnett wounded.

Mr. A. R. Colquioun is to have charge of the frontier between Upper Assam and the Irrawaddi at Bhamo, and will be Deputy Commissioner of the Mogoung district. His work will be to bring the rude tribes into order and open up communication with Assam, if possible.

THE Government of India have publicly reprimanded

Colonel Hooper as a mark of their strong disapproval of his connection with the Mandalay scandals.

THE COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF will probably undertake a series of four tours during the cold weather, one of which will include a visit to the new cantonment of Jhansi, and another a ride down the frontier from Peshawar to Dera Ghazi Khan, and thence along the new Bori Peshin road to Quetta.

THE Frontier railways are still progressing steadily. The Sind-Peshin line is now past Sharigh. Very heavy floods are reported below Hurnai. The Sind-Sagar line is being laid at the rate of a mile a day. The rails have reached a point north of Darya Khan opposite Dehra Ismail, some 150 miles in all having been laid. The whole frontier system, both trans and cis-Indus, should be completed by April next year.

The question of the redistribution of Army Commands in Bengal is likely to be settled soon, when great changes may be expected.

SIR STEUART BAYLEY will, it is understood, shortly proceed to England on six months' leave on medical certificate, returning in time to take up his duties in Bengal next April.

LORD ULICK BROWNE, Commissioner of the Rajashahye Division, will retire from the service on the 1st proximo, on the completion of thirty-five years' service.

HEAVY rain fell throughout the North-West Provinces during the week ending the 4th inst., and a break is much needed. The prospects of the crop are on the whole good.

COLONEL LOCKHART gets command of a brigade in Burma. He leaves Simla for Mandalay early next month.

COLONEL A. J. FILGATE, Accountant-General of Public Works, whose five years' term of office expires shortly, will get an extension of a year at least.

A GREAT gathering of old Cheltonians is being arranged at Poona for the first week in September, the principal features of the reunion being a dinner and a cricket match v. the World. Cheltenham is probably more largely represented in India (there are said to be forty O. C.'s in Poona alone), than any English school, and if the men at a distance are able to support the meeting it will be a very large one. Captain L. Steele, Lancashire Regiment, is in charge of all the arrangements.

The Bombay Gazette says:—Sir John Eldon Gorst has his consolation. He does not succeed Mr. Grant Duff at Madras, but he has been nominated to an office at home which once was his, and which Mr. Grant Duff's reputed successor filled in the last Conservative Administration; and that is an advantage which the new Under-Secretary for India ought to appreciate. His appointment will doubtless be criticised. But the Peshkar remembers, if others have forgotten, that he has been to India, and though even the Peshkar might hesitate to say that he made himself master of Indian affairs, it is not open to that eccentric Hyderabadi to deny that the intelligent member for Chatham's visit to this country was much more profitable to him then the cold weather tourist's visit usually is. Whoever asks for other proof of Sir John Gorst's qualifications for high place at the India Office must wait awhile. It is not surprising that an Under Secretaryship has been found for Sir James Fergusson; but it is a little astonishing that it should have been found at the Foreign Office. Some of his Indian acquaintances who cannot be num bered amongst his friends may rejoice that his five years' residence in the Bombay Presidency has not been deemed a qualification for an appointment at the India Office; but that is no reason why one who knows much of Colonial administration, and claims to know nothing of foreign affairs, should be sent to the Foreign Office. Industry, intelligence, and good sense count for much, but it is scarcely likely that these qualities, with which he is well endowed: We all wish him well in it, but that is a different thing from believing that he will do well. People will ask, no doubt, why he was not sent to the Colonial Office, forgetting that he has some practical acquaintance with Colonial administration, and that the rule of the square reg in the round hole would have beer violated had he been put to work that he had any manner of experience in.

Hotes of the Week.

CALCUTTA does not appear to be particularly well supplied with correct information regarding Indian appointments made in England. The Englishman informs its readers that "the appointment of Lord Harris to the Governorship of Madras may now be regarded as a certainty," and that he will take up the appointment in the middle of October.

A long article is devoted to the merits of Lord Harris, and good advice is given to him with much editorial kind-It is noted, of course, that he is a young and untried man, but, says the writer, "the hereditary interest of his family in the Southern Presidency will ensure him a warm welcome, while his prowess in the national game of cricket will, in any society of Englishmen, stand him in good stead as a guarantee for his manliness."

SIR FREDERICK ROBERTS paid a fitting compliment to the Punjab Frontier Force at a dinner which he gave at Simla to certain officers of the Force who were on leave at the After referring to his experience of the good service rendered by officers and men "during the weary watch on the Ridge" at Delhi, and of his being an eye-witness of the gallant rush at the breach in the Sikanderbagh at Lucknow when, according to Malleson, whom he quoted, "on went in generous rivalry the turban of the Sikh and the dark plume of the Highlander," he concluded in toasting the health of the Force. "Should Her Majesty's Army in India during my tenure of command find itself engaged in any serious struggle, I trust that many of the Frontier Force regiments may be found on the fighting line. I know that they would do their duty nobly; and I believe that one and all of the officers would eagerly take as their motto in the hour of trial the words 'Dulce et decorum est pro patria mori,' the last words that were spoken by, and which are so fittingly inscribed on the tombstone of, the gallant Quentin Battye, one of the bravest of the many brave men who have served in that Force."

An absurd rumour has been published by a military contemporary to the effect that his Royal Highness the Duke of Connaught will, on his arrival in India, be placed in special command of the Punjab Frontier Force, and that the officers and men are looking forward with much pleasure to this arrangement. His Royal Highness goes to a Divisional command, and having qualified for a lieutenant-generalship will return to England. He certainly will not be placed in command of any Indian frontier.

THE Rangoon Gazette complains that it is hard on capable men in the Burma Commission, who are never promoted to India, to find themselves passed over in Burma when promotion is going. The last quarterly Civil list enumerates fifteen districts in Upper Burma. In three of them young Assistant Commissioners are officiating as District Officers, on "Special allowances" of Rs. 225 to Rs. 250 per month One Commissioner has been brought from India, who gets Rs 2,500 per mensem, whilst there are many capable Deputy Commissioners in Burma who are only drawing about half that pay. We have some time ago commented on the absurdity of paying a certain class of Europeans in the Subordinate Judicial Service Rs. 400 to Rs. 700 per mensem for doing precisely the same work which more fortunate men get Rs. 500 to Rs. 800 for performing. The Service should be open, and the best men allowed to win, whether covenanted, uncovenanted, or Staff Corps. In Upper Burma there are four Burmese Myooks, with secondclass magisterial powers, who draw only Rs. 50 per mensem each!"

COLONEL CHARLES HAY, who has recently retired from the Bombay Saff Corps, has been elected, out of forty-nine candidates, to the office of Wardenlin Christ's Hospital, London, School, in succession to Lieut. Colonel Sedley, resigned, and takes up the appointment in September next.

LATEST INTELLIGENCE.

(BY TELEGRAPH.) (Times Correspondents.) INDIA.

CALCUTTA, AUGUST 29. The silver question continues to be much discussed. Very general satisfaction is expressed at the fact that the British public general satisfaction is expressed at the fact that the British public now seems to be thoroughly convinced as to the importance of the subject, and at the prospect of having it carefully examined by a Royal Commission. The article published in The Times of August 2 is quoted by almost every Indian newspaper, and the views therein set forth meet with general approval. It is now certain that the fall in the exchange since March will sweep away the small surplus provided in the Budget and leave a large deficit. How Sir A. Colvin will propose to meet the deficit is of course unknown. The plan adopted will probably be that of increasing the income-tax or the salt-tax, or both. The augmentation of the former tax will be a most unpopular step, and many newspapers former tax will be a most unpopular step, and many newspapers are already urging that it would be better to re-impose the cotton import duties. It may be doubted, however, whether any Indian Government would venture on an act which would be certain to meet with strong opposition from Manchester. The Bengal Chamber of Commerce has memorialised the Viceroy on the subject of the inadequate accommodation for goods provided at the Calcutta terminus of the East Indian Railway, and the difficulties thereby imposed on the export trade. A scheme for increasing that accommodation, prepared last year by the railway authorities, was disallowed by the Government on grounds which the Chamber shows to be quite insufficient. The memorial also complains that the Public Works Department, in its ignorance of the character and requirements of trade, has insisted upon stopping the arrangements regarding demurrage on goods which had been made between the railway authorities and the merchants, and which were working admirably. The Chamber urges the necessity of making concessions to expanding trade, and prays the necessity of making concessions to expanding trade, and prays the Viceroy to take the matter into his immediate consideration.

At a meeting, held on Friday, of the subscribers to the fund raised last year on the occasion of the severe floods and cyclone raised last year on the occasion of the severe floods and cyclone in Bengal and Orissa, it was resolved that the unexpended balance should be invested, thus forming the nucleus of a fund for the relief of people suffering from inundations or famine. The secretary stated that he had received numerous pressing telegrams for help from Sylhet and Tipperah, both which districts appear to have been visited with heavy floods. One telegram from Tipperah stated that the people had been obliged to leave their houses, that the cattle were starving, and that the rice crops were damaged. The secretary was instructed to communicate with the district officers, to ascertain the extent of the distress, and to district officers, to ascertain the extent of the distress, and to send such relief as was required.

The Laltahuri embankment in Moorshedabad, fears for which have been entertained for some weeks past, still holds out, and every precaution is being taken to secure it. It is hoped that the danger will be over in a fortnight, and that the districts which that embankment protects may not suffer a repetition of last year's disaster. The floods in Behar are going down.

The claim is generally considered quite inadmissible, and the hope is expressed that England will refuse to recognise it, and will support the Ameer. THE POLICE IN BURMA.

(Rangoon Gazette.)

The whole question of the police in Burma is surrounded by difficulties. The Burmese, as a generous rule, make very bad policemen. Leaving their other faults out of the question at present, their cowardice makes them quite useless during disturbed times like the presont. Everywhere, or with only one or two exceptions, they have fled at the first hint of danger, and have left their arms behind to be taken possession of by the dacoits. It is clearly necessary that some braver race of men should be imported to cope with the anarchy and lawlessness now so rife in the province; and in the matter of courage the Punjaubees are, we believe, satisfactory enough. But if they are to make the quiet and industrious portion of the population discontented by their illegal exactions and assaults, they will be doing far more harm than can be counterbalanced by any amount of successful dacoit hunting. The whole question of the police in Burma is surrounded by dacoit hunting.

It is easier to find fault with the police than to suggest any

It is easier to find fault with the police than to suggest any feasible plan for getting a really satisfactory force in the country. But there are one or two points which stand out clearly enough. The first of these is that it is useless trying to work on the cheap. "Cheap and nasty," holds good in the matter of the Burma police even more than in most other things. Until the country is more thickly peopled, and the price of labour is greatly reduced, we must be prepared for a far greater expenditure on our police force than is necessary in India, where labour is cheaper and the average scale of living much lower. Another is cheaper and the average scale of living much lower. Another point which seems clear enough is that, having to depend on comparatively worthless material in the ranks of the force, and being unable in the present condition of the labour market to pay the men a high wage compared to what can be earned by other labour, we must pay for very complete and efficient control, especially by European officers. These can be had in any quantity, and had they been more largely employed, it is certain that anarchy would never have raised its head, as it has done, in Lower Burma. Under European leadership even the Burmese policeman does not always run away, and were the Purjaubees more largely officered by Europeans, their high-handed extortions would have been nipped in the bud. No European police officer would have allowed his men to get out of hand in the way these Punjaubees have; and not only in the case of these men, but also in that of the Burmese police and of the Madras sepoys, it has been abundantly demonstrated, during the Madras sepoys, it has been abundantly demonstrated, during our recent troubles in Burma, that an economy in British officers is a very penny wise and pound foolish sort of economy indeed.

THE HOLOCAUST IN TINNEVELLY.

(Correspondent Madras Mail.)

The night of the 26th of July will be ever memorable. The sacrifice of 200 souls or more to the demon of malice or mischief marked the exit of that eventful day. For the darkness of midnight was lit up by lurid flames amid which the struggles of the living and the dying formed a picture which the genius of Dante alone could paint. The facts are that for some days past a Native theatrical company had been performing before large crowds for successive nights. The representation was, of course, connected with Hindu legends, such as are found in Vedic poetry. connected with Hindu legends, such as are found in Vedic poetry. The place where the play was exhibited was in the heart of the crowded town of Tinnevelly, close by the huge temple which forms so prominent a figure in the town, as the Temple of Minachi does in Madura. The structure was large, made of thatch, erected on a mud wall, and capable of accommodating hundreds of people. The proprietors, it is said, have realised as much as Rs. 800 on a single night. From this you may infer the numbers of the crowd inside. This structure, of course, had a door which the greed of the performers kept shut—that is, locked—to prevent those who could not, or who would not pay, from entering. In this enclosure the lambent flames licked the from entering. In this enclosure the lambent flames licked the victims, and gradually enveloped them in one great funeral pyre, till the charred remains of human flesh had lost all traces of recognition. At midnight, when the little stars twinkled with their merry rippling light and the music of the dancers swelled the hearts of the thoughtless votaries, the wand of the angel of death was stretched over the ill-fated building. The sudden burst of the devouring element on the top of the erection was the first intimation to the hapless crowd beneath of their impending fate. Then the writhing of the seething mass baffles description. The struggles of frantic despair, the shrieks of helpless terror, the hearse gasps of suffocation, as the infuriate, demon of death choked his victims, combined with the loud wails of the hereaved formed a picture which may perhaps find a of the bereaved, formed a picture which may perhaps find a parallel in the "Inferno." Many escaped. Some were thrown over a wall on one side of the theatre by a Mahomedan athlete, who happened to be present; others escaped, by hook or by crook, the best way they could; but numbers perished. It is to be hoped a rigid inquiry will be made into this terrible business, and no stone left unturned to ascertain the cause.

FOR THE FINANCE COMMITTEE. (Pioneer Correspondent.)

Assuming that the Government of India is in earnest in the Assuming that the Government of India is in earnest in the endeavour to reduce the cost of our administration, would it not be reasonable to consider whether the salaries paid in the higher posts of the Covenanted Civil Service are not susceptible of some reduction? Are we not paying an unduly high price for a standard of ability and honesty which we may thankfully say is now more common than in the days of Iord Cornwallis? If we have the beauty of the common than in the days of Iord Cornwallis? If we have the beauty of the common than can get honest bale men for positions of great responsibility for salaries less, say, by one-third of what is paid to Covenanted Civil Servants, what are the gounds on which we pay them so liberally ? Compare for example the training the duties the Civil Servants, what are the gounds on which we pay them so liberally? Compare, for example, the training, the duties, the responsibilities of a Superintending Engineer of a Circle in the Public Works Department, with that of a Collector or Judge of a district, and compare their salaries. The former receives an average pay of Rs. 1,350 per mensem, while the average of the latter is, I believe, something very like Rs. 2,000. Again, if a Covenanted Civil Servant becomes a Secretary to Government, his forthwith in receipt of a special and very liberal salary for this duty. On the other hand, when an Engineer becomes a Secretary, he draws no more than the pay of his grade. The effect of this wasteful system is that the salaries of posts outside the proper sphere of a Civilian's duties are unnecessarily raised in order apparently that they may be suited to the standing of the Civilians appointed to them, or afford more openings for the Civilians appointed to them, or afford more openings for the members of this too favoured service. Why, for instance, is it necessary to make the pay of a Postmaster-General of a Province so high that a Civilian can afford to take it, and is, moreover, put in over the heads of men of long service and experience in the Postal Department who would be glad to do the work, and do the closure of the pay given to the Civilian?

The obvious difficulty in grappling with a proposal of this nature lies in the fact that the Government of India is practically a Government by the Civil Service, and we can hardly expect them to make any serious attempts toward economy in this direction. But it cannot be ignored that we can now get men who would readily come into the Civil Service on equal terms with men in other branches of the administration, and who would fulfil quite as well as at present the requisite standard of ability and rectitude. If the salary of the Civil Servant is reduced as it should be the pension would be reduced pro rata, and no great harm would be done there. It is somewhat anomalous that the men of the reaction would be competition will be should would be done there. It is somewhat anomalous that the men of the social position of the present competition-wallah should revel in £1,000 a-year on retirement, a goodly proportion of which is derived from his high salary, while men of the same stamp doing equally good work for the State have to pass their declining years as genteel paupers, and on pensions paid in rupees.

BRITISH BLUNDERING IN BURMA. (Rangoon Gazette).

Not only were the Burmese troops not disarmed at Myingyan, but at Ava, where a general disarmament had been agreed to by Theebaw secured his own wretched person from any risk of being killed in an attack on Mandalay, the disarmament was not thoroughly carried out. A certain number of the Burmese troops did lay down their arms, but numbers escaped without doing so and it is said that when it was pointed out to Colonel Sladen that these men were thus escaping with their arms, his only reply was that it did not matter, as there was a complete list of arms in the palace. Yet he ought to have known, as well or better than most men, that a Burmese palace list of any kind was hardly a document in which to place blind faith any than the hardly a document in which to place blind faith; and that even if it were correct, it would afford no assistance in bringing in arms in the hands of dacoits scattered through inaccessible

It could scarcely have been the eagerness of General Prendergast and of Colonel Sladen to catch Theebaw that led to the letting part of the troops, sent to Ava purposely to lay down their arms, escape into the jungles as fully equipped dacoits. It would have taken very little time to stop that little game; and if Theebaw were meditating an escape at the last moment, his attempt stood far less chance of success had his former coldiers been completely disarmed than if some thousands of them were at large and ready to join him again at a moment's notice. It is difficult to imagine any reason which could have seemed, even for a moment, to recommend such a course as not effectually disarming the troops while about it. The supineness displayed on that occasion is without parallel in history, but it seems only fair to exonerate Sir Harry Prendergast from any share in the blame. After the capitulation Colonel Sladen, as Chief Civil Officer. became the responsible head, and if the story we have mentioned above be true, as we have every reason to believe it is, he showed an incapacity which seems almost imbecile.

Nor was this want of foresight which filled a newly-conquered country with armed ruffians the only blunder that was committed. Another stupid mistake was in issuing an order allowing the palace women ingress and egress after Theebaw had become a prisoner under a guard of British soldiers. It was practically allowing him to communicate with any friends he might have outside, which should not have been permitted under any circumstances. Any mischief he may have meditated in that way was perhaps frustrated by the further mistake made in giving, or in carrying out, the order, and which resulted in the entranceinto the palace of the very worst of the female population in Mandalay. The effect of that may be imagined, but can scarcely be described. All that can be said is that it is exceedingly fortunate that, in the wild orgy of that first night in the palace, no greater mischance occurred than some pilfering of jewels by women, who for that night passed as the ladies of the palace. Then Theebaw was, in our opinion, allowed to shuffle too long about his departure, and it seems to have been Sir Harry Prendergast who at the last insisted that time was up, and that he must go. Finally came the most egregious blunder of all, the attempt to govern the country by means of the Hloot-daw, with the Tinedsh as one of its most active members. the Tinedah as one of its most active members.

NOT WANTED-A MUNICIPALITY. (Madras Mail.)

It must be exceedingly disgusting to a Liberal Governor like H.E. Sir M. E. Grant Duff to have to deal with people like the inhabitants of Srivallipattur and Tadpatri. For Municipalities represent one form of self-government; and here are townsfolk so wanting in public spirit as to refuse such self-government. How can a Governor, who is loyal to Lord Ripon's grand scheme of educating the country in self-government, and who loyally means to develop it as much as possible, deal with people so spiritless? The disgust must be all the greater when the plea on which the refusal is based is considered. A Municipality, forsooth, is too costly! Can souls so sordid deserve freedom and the bless ings of Municipal institutions? Ought they not retain ings of Municipal institutions? Ought they not rather to be well shaken, and forced to enjoy their glorious privileges and all. the attendant advantages and expense of so doing? There appears to be something that can be said on both sides of the question. It may be, and probably is, the case that Tadpatri admits of improvements in the matters of sanitation, water supply, roads, hospitals, schools, properly built houses, &c. We believe, however, that the town is not in a very bad condition as to sanitation; and the townsfolk plume themselves that there is nothing much beyond what they already have that a Municipality can effect beyond what they already have, that a Municipality can effect for them; and that that little they can effect for themselves without the elaborate and costly apparatus of a Municipality and its officers. But who is to be responsible for this? It is very well for the townsfolk to say at a general meeting that they can effect all necessary improvements for themselves without the instrumentality of a Municipality; but if the improvements are not effected, or if they are very inadequately effected, or are indefinitely postponed; on whom as responsible persons, can the district authorities and the Government come down? And district authorities are enjoyed. meantime, if from insanitation or a want of good water, an epidemic should find its way and prevail there, and decimate the inhabitants, could a paternal Government contemplate the catastrophe unmoved or with dry eyes? Or if among thatched houses a fire should break out, and crowds of ryots and artisans should besiege the tabsildar in his katcheri for free licences for the commonest kinds of timber to reconstruct their houses as before, and afford the destroying element another opportunity of burning the houses down; would any of those who attended the meeting and helped to frame the resolution against the proffered Municipality, recoup Government for the value of the licences, or comfort the heart of the forest officers, lacerated by such a raid on their preserves? Who, who will be responsible for doing what the population promise shall be done in the way of town improvement?

On the other hand, the townsfolk may answer, that, compared with the standard of what most Municipalities actually effect, and the price which they charge for doing it, their own conservancy and improvements will be found not much behindhand, and certainly very much cheaper. Though theoretically a Municipality, having skilled officers, and men of light and leading to direct them, may seem bound to fall little short of perfection, yet in practice they do fall a good way short; and their taxes greatly diminish the peace of mind, competence and comfort of townsfolk. Some of the people of Tadpatri have come to Madras with bales of cotton; and verily they do not find that newly repaired Popham's Broadway is a bit better than their own main street after a shower; indeed, it is probably many times worse. Some of the slums, ay, even of the minor streets, of Madras are quite as bad as the lanes of Tadpatri; and that town can produce nothing in the way of stinks that can come up to the potent and deadly odours that prevail in parts of Madras. Negapatam has a Municipality, and Negapatam is not sweet! Tinnevelly has a Municipality; and yet the temporary theatre erected in that town with Municipal sanction has been burned down with a frightful loss of life; whereas theatrical representations would in Tadpatri without a Municipality be carried out in a manner more consistent with health and safety, and more conducive to the greatest happiness of the greatest number. The people of Tadpatri sympathise heartily with the desire of Government to create a middle and professional class; to find places of fussy importance for Native gentlemen who have received the higher education in a general way; and to create appointments with comparatively fat salaries for Natives who have received a technical or professional education, whether in medicine or engineering. But they do not want to have and to pay for a Civil Surgeon or an engineer all to themselves; and they would prefer indenting on such skilled labour as most of them already pay for, and as may be had from the Local Board. And upon the funds of that board also, to which many of them have contributed, they are quite willing to draw, instead of having to pay over again for the same thing to a body made up of one or two intelligent and powerful officials and a number of timid and less educated non-officials, who will but add power to the official arm when fleecing the people. They wish to avoid the ordinary municipal modus operandi of contracts, and of various percentages for merely seeming to do, for doing very badly, and for ha

BENGAL.

The Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal lcaves Calcutta on the 23rd inst., on tour, visiting Monghyr, Bhagulpore, Sahebgunge, and Pubna, and reaches Darjeeling again on the 6th of Sept.

THE recent statement that it is definitely settled that Sir Stuart Bayley would succeed Sir Rivers Thompson as Lieutenant Governor of Bengal, is totally unauthorized. No information has been received on the subject from England, where the appointment is made. It is not known who succeeds Sir Rivers Thompson.

Mr. Finucane, the Director of Agriculture in Bengal, has, in connection with the proposed establishment of a Veterinary School at Bhaugulpur, sent a letter to the Commissioners of Divisions asking if they think it probable that the Local Boards or zemindars would be willing to give employment to passed students, to found scholarships, or to send students to the school at their own expense.

THE Pioneer says:—Sir Steuart Bayley will, we hear shortly proceed to England on six months leave on medical certificate, returning in time to take up his duties in Bengal next April. The officiating vacancy thus caused in the Council might well go to Sir Charles Bernard, who greatly needs change of scene; while Mr. Charles Crosthwaite could take Burma in hand, as he is no stranger to that country.

The Englishman regrets to learn that there is some reason for anticipating a recurrence of the inundations which caused such, extensive damage last year to the crops of the Nadya District and interrupted for several days the traffic on the Eastern Bengal Railway. The Bhagirati gauge-reading on the 3rd inst. was 26 min. 8 sec., an inch higher than the figures for the corresponding date in 1885, and only 5 min. below the highest point then reached. The rise reported on the 4th was four inches, and should anything like the same rate be maintained, the Laltakuri embankment, on the preservation of which the safety of the district depends, will again be overflowed in several places. Daily telegrams as to the rise of the Bhagirati and the state of the embankment are despatched from Moorshedabad and widely circulated among the people, who will be saved much unnecessary less by timely notice being given them of the occurrence of the calamity so much dreaded.

MADRAS.

THE Hindoo says that it learns from a reliable source that Mr.

C. A. Lawson, editor of the Madras Mail, will be rewarded with the shrievalty of Madras when Captain Taylor vacates his seat.

The Madras Government has referred, for the consideration of the various District Boards, proposals from Messrs. Weir and Company, of Madras, to contract for the construction of light railways. Messrs. Weir and Co.'s proposals have met the approval of Government as being very simple and fair, as they are willing to undertake the construction of such lines not on a Government guarantee, but upon bonds from the District Boards carrying a certain rate of interest, and containing conditions as to payment, &c.

The Madras Government are about to make a series of practical experiments on the preparation of ensilage, and the results of feeding cattle, sheep, and ponies upon it. Sixteen officers in charge of the various districts have been selected to carry out the experiments, for which they will be provided at first with the sum of Rs. 30 each by the Director of Agriculture. Printed illustrations have been furnished them as to the proper method of constructing the silos, and careful reports of the results are to be submitted to the Director of Agriculture, who is to send in his own report on the results to the Government. Attempts are to be made to induce the ryots to lend their cattle and sheep for experiments with the feeding, and these are to be carefully weighed at different periods to ascertain whether the animals improve in condition or not, and also whether the ensilage has any effect on the quality and quantity of the milk from the cows. Some trials are also to be made upon ponies to ascertain what effect it has on their condition when in hard work.

BOMBAY.

According to the Poona paper, thousands of natives have assembled daily near the Islampoora at Khetwady, to witness the marvellous moving of a tomb, which, at intervals, seems to oscillate from its foundation. According to the paper mentioned, "the story is that about half a certury ago the tomb was erected by the halalcores of that locality, to the memory of their religious guide or pir, Jahed, and that about forty years ago it was raised to its present magnitude. The dome is supported by four pillars, and the entire height is about fifteen feet. Four small spircs surmount each pillar. The tomb is built of bricks brought from the tomb of a pir in the village of Dadar, in the Vagad Zilla. The first motion of the canopy, with its pillars, was witnessed recently and the people were very superstitious about it. Many witnesses have spoken to the fact."

The Government of Bombay, in the belief that the Veterinary College at Bombay will be more advantageously controlled by an Administrative Committee than by Government direct, have appointed a committee of management for the College. It will consist of the Commissioner of the Northern Division, the Surgeon-General, the Principal, Grant Medical College, the Collector of Bombay, the Municipal Commissioner, the Chairman of the Chamber of Commerce, Mr. Dinshah Maneckji Petit, the Director of Agriculture, the Educational Inspector of the Central Division, the Superintendent of Horse-Breeding Operations, and the Secretary to the Bombay Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals. Mr. Steel, the Superintendent of the College, will act as secretary to the Committee. The Military Department will be requested to grant permission to the Inspecting Veterinary Surgeon of the Bombay Army to serve on the Committee.

NORTH-WEST PROVINCES.

THE Labore paper hears that the recent heavy rain in the Jhelum district has done considerable damage to the Sind-Sagar State Railway. On the right bank of the Jhelum river, near Pind Dadan Khan, some of the smaller bridges and flood openings have been completely wrecked.

DR. OWEN, on return from Northern Afghanistan, may not improbably be offered the post of Joint Civil Surgeon at Simla, in succession to Dr. Franklin, Dr. Taylor being confirmed at Surgeon to the Commander-in-Chief, in which capacity he has been acting during Dr. Owen's abence with the Boundary Commission.

THE Lahore paper understands that before leaving Simla the Firance Commission arrived at one very definite conclusion, which is to the effect that any idea of the Government of India abandoning that station as its summer headquarters must, at any rate on financial grounds, be finally set aside. For the Imperial Government to now abandon Simla would more than swallow up all the rest of the possible savings which the Commission has so far been able to suggest from other sources.

Mr. Charles Du Val's entertainment at the Princes Hall, having been so successful, he has secured the handsome Concert Room for a further term, and concluded an extension of engagements with the Count, Countess, and Baron Magri. Mr. Du Valintends inviting the leading singers, and other members of the musical world, to a special matinée at the Princes Hall to hear the Lilliputians and the Circassians.

NATIVE PRESS.

THE HIGH COURT.—Our respect for the High Court is unshaken. The High Court is the only hope of the people of this country. Although we pay a great deal for this Court, still we wish to keep it complete in every way. When a proposal was made to reduce the number and salary of the High Court Judges the whole population protested. If the Finance Committee is really desirous to effect reductions it ought to turn its attention in other directions, but it has no mind to do that. The Committee would like to make reductions where reductions ought not to be made.—The Purbadarpan.

NATIVE DEMANDS.—In the event of a war with Russia, the Natives of India will undoubtedly side with the English. Every Native of India will surely consider the difficulties of the English as his own. Let the English begin to trust the Natives more. In this crisis they will not be able to proceed one step without the assistance of the Natives. The English alone cannot check the advance of Russia. From this time the English should take care that the respect felt by the Natives for the British Government remains unshaken.—The Praja Bandhu.

RETRENCHMENT FROM THE WRONG END.

Under this heading, the Rast Goftar of the 8th inst. says thus: Government have asked the High Court whether the abolition of the Small Cause Courts at Poona, Ahmedabad, Surat and Broach, and the transfer of the work of those Courts to the Judges of the local Subordinate Courts would cause any public inconvenience or not; and the High Court in their turn have called for the opinions from the Judges of the Small Cause Courts proposed to be abolished, on the receipt of which they will submit their views on the subject to the Bombay Government. The above news of the intention of Government has been received with much dissatisfactention of Government has been received with much dissatisfaction by persons who resort to the Small Cause Courts of Ahmedebad, Surat, and Broach, which are the centres of commerce in Guzerat. It is true that at first when these Courts were opened people did not take a liking to them on account of their novel procedure, inasmuch as there was no appeal on the decisions of those Courts, which were final. But as fortunately in the beginning they were presided over by such popular, painstaking, and impartial jugdes as Mr. Coghlan, Baron Larpent, Sir William Wedderburn and the late Mr. Faithful, these Courts worked smoothly, and as suitors obtained justice so sueedily, cheaply and smoothly, and as suitors obtained justice so speedily, cheaply and summarily, that they, after having become acquainted with the simpl procedure of those Courts, by degrees, not only got over their aversion, but, on the contrary, they now look upon these Courts with satisfaction and confidence. Therefore the dissatisfaction which the proposal for the abolition of these Courts has created can easily be accounted for. Before the establishment of the County Courts in England, the procedure for the recovery of small debts was very complicated, dilatory and expensive in that country, which led to the passing of the County Court Act. The experience obtained from the working Court Act. The experience obtained from the working of the County Courts in England led to the establishment of Small Cause Courts in Calcutta, Madras and Bombay. On being satisfied that these Courts dispensed justice cheaply and speedily, the Government of India, with the concurrence of those of the Government of India, with the concurrence of those of Madras and Bombay, established similar Courts in the chief Provincial towns of our country, by which also justice is administered, at present as speedily to the people at large in the Mofussil as in the Presidency towns. Small Cause Courts have been established since a long time in the principal towns of this Presidency, such as Poona, Ahmedabad, Nariad, Surat, Broach, and Kurrachee, and, with the exception of the Kurrachee Court, in all the remaining Courts there are Native judges, who perform their duty in a manner equally satisfactory to Government and the public, and no complaint or cry about the mode in which they administer justice has ever been raised. Again, when Government is not put to the expense of a farthing on account of these Courts, whose receipts, on the contrary, are much greater than their expenditure, ceipts, on the contrary, are much greater than their expenditure, there seems no reason why such Courts should be abolished. Instead of abolishing these Courts perhaps it would undoubtedly be more advisable to reduce one second-class Subordinate Judge's Court in each Zilla. Lastly, it becomes us to say on this occasion that, with the exception of a seat on the bench of the High Court, there are no higher openings to which Native judges who enter the Judicial branch of the public service after obtaining a high university education and passing difficult examinations in law can aspire, than judgeships of Small Cause Courts, and, therefore, the abolition of these Courts is sure to cause them no little disappointment. little disappointment.

THE Rangoon correspondent of the Pioneer telegraphs that twenty Public Works coolies were killed by dacoits near Mingyan. The dacoits also captured twenty-five carts of bazaar goods belonging to traders near Yemethen. Major Socrell was sent out in pursuit, and after two days' hard marching attacked the dacoits and captured their stockade, destroying it. Our loss was one wounded. Mr. Snadden, of the police, has been wounded by dacoits in the Shwegyeen district.

MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

Consequent on the increase of the force at Burma the following appointments on the staff there have been made:—Cavalry Brigade.—Brigadier - General R. C. Stewart; Quartermaster-General, Madras Brigade, a Major to be selected by the Madras Government from British service; and Deputy Assistant Quartermaster-General, Major N. Chamberlain, interpreter to the Commander-in-Chief. Infantry Brigade.—Brigadier-General C. East, Saugor District; Brigade-Major, Captain A. Ternan, 44th Goorkha Light Infantry; Deputy Assistant Quartermaster-General, Captain B. Spragge, South Yorkshiro Regiment. Infantry Brigade.—Brigadier-General W. Lochhart; Quartermaster-General, Brigade-Major, Major P. Jefferys, Connaught Rangers; Deputy Assistant Quartermaster-General, to be selected by the Bombay Government from the Indian service and to proceed to Burma ahead of the troops to superintend their debarkation.

Major W. Symonds, South Wales Borderers, has been appointed to command the Mounted Infantry, Burma, with Lieut. J. Burrows, 14th Madras Infantry, as Staff Officer.

It is notified that warrant officers of the Indian service, on obtaining commissioned rank, and senior apothecaries who enjoy the advantages attaching to the honorary rank, shall cease to be designated warrant officers, and shall simply be styled honorary commissioned officers and senior apothecaries. All regulations will be modified accordingly, so as entirely to abolish the use of the word "warrant." In regard to their pay, passages, allowances, and other conditions of service, this change does not in any way affect the existing position of such officers. In regard to regulations now applicable to them, the departmental titles of Deputy Commissary, Assistant Commissary, Deputy Assistant Commissary, and Senior Apothecary will remain as at present.

Consequent on the transfer of the Punjab Frontier Force to the Commander-in-Chief, the office of Military Secretary to the Punjab Government will probably be abolished shortly.

OBITUARY.

LIEUTENANT - COLONEL G. F. BRYANT.—Lieutenant - Colonel George Frederick Bryant, 2nd Belooch Regiment (Duke of Connaught's Own), died on the 6th ult. at sea, on his voyage home from India. He entered the army as an ensign in June, 1859, obtaining his lieutenancy in August, 1861, captaincy in June, 1871, and his lieutenant-coloneley in June, 1885. He served throughout the Abyssinian Campaign in the Commissariat Department, and on special duty connected with the transport train (medal). He also served in the Afghan War of 1878-80, and took part in the advance on Khelat-i-Ghilzie and Candahar, accompanying Sir Frederick Roberts in the march to Candahar, and being present at the battle of Candahar, and receiving the medal with clasp and bronze decoration. Colonel Bryant also served in the Egyptian War of 1882, receiving the medal and Khedive's star and the order of the 4th Class of the Osmanieh.

Major General James Limond Benwell.—Major-General James Limond Benwell, of the Madras Staff Corps (Retired List), late of the 33rd Madras Infantry, died at Richmond, Surrey, at the close of last week, aged fifty-nine years. The deceased officer entered the army in 1849, and obtained a lieutenancy in 1853. He was employed in field service with the Kamptee Movable Column in the Saugor and Nerbudda territories and in the Raepore district from July, 1857, till April in the following year, and was present at the engagement with the mutineers of the 52nd Bengal Native Infantry and the rebels near Kuttengie, and in the Khonee Pass in September and December, 1857.

It is significant of the very slow development of the trade of Madras that, in 1885, the application of the "Factories Act" was requisite in only twenty-four instances; that is to say, that there exist but that number of factories in which more than one hundred operatives are employed. Of these, fourteen only are in the hands of private persons, the remainder being under Government. The Mail therefore suggests that exhibitions should be organised for the purpose of educating the masses. "Such a scheme," it says, "would, no doubt, not be devoid of somewhat heavy expenditure; yet, if there seemed a fair hope of turning the attention of the wealthy part of the population to the advantages of manufacturing pursuits, it would certainly be money well spent. Makers of machinery in England, and elsewhere, might be tempted to take the risk of loss in transit, if the carriage of articles, not found saleable, were defrayed by Government. To machinery shown in actual working might be added exhibits of models, together with specimens of raw products, in their various forms of preparation for manufacture. If such an Exhibition were timed so as to be in order at the probable date of the opening of the Singareni coal fields, a great impetus to trade might be looked for, whilst the value of this source of future prosperity te this Presidency would be forced rapidly upon public notice."

BOLINGBROKE AND VOLTAIRE IN ENGLAND.*

Of all the characters on the stage of life which have dazzled, delighted, and distressed the human heart, Henry St. John Viscount Bolingbroke stands pre-eminently first, alike as regards his genius and his faults. A glance at his career will suffice to show the basis of this criticism.

Passing over the earlier years of life we find Bolingbroke in 1697 in London abandoned to the "dominion of the two passions which ever afterwards ruled him—inordinate ambition and inordinate love of pleasure." After four years' satiety in all the gaieties and excesses of a gallant's life he entered Parliament, and at once attached himself to the Tories; so eloquent, too, was his tongue, so exceptional was his oratory, and withal so unrivalled were his abilities that after three years tutelage amongst the "faithful Commons," he was appointed Secretary of War. During his tenure of office he did not scruple to intrigue with the Whigs, and lent no small aid towards the downfall of his own party. Then followed two years of retirement, at the termination of which Bolingbroke succeeded to the splendid heritage of the Secretaryship of the Northern Department—the Foreign Office of Queon Anne's time. "He now," says Mr. Collins, "plunged headlong into those dark and tortuous intrigues which finally drove him in shame from his country, and have made his name ever since synonomous with all that is most odious in a reckless and unprincipled public servant, and all that is most contemptible in a treacherous and self-seeking diplomatist."

name ever since synonomous with all that is most odious in a reckless and unprincipled public servant, and all that is most contemptible in a treacherous and self-seeking diplomatist."

The death of the Queen was a fatal blow to his career, and in 1714 he was summarily dismissed, his office was put under lock and key, his papers were seized and sealed up. This disagreeable intelligence shocked him for "at least two minutes," but the grief of his soul was that he saw "plainly that the Tory party is gone." On March 26 he fled to the Continent—why has never been satisfactorily explained—and at once, with characteristic ardour and want of principle, commenced to intrigue with the Jacobins. If the Pretender did not succeed in sitting on the throne of England it was assuredly no fault of the talented stranger, who had then taken up the cause of the kingly aspirant with a fervour, a zeal, and a skill which outrivalled the listless attempt of all his coadjutors. But his efforts were futile, and, in the end, he quarrelled with the Chevalier James and retired, a mortified, disappointed, baffled diplomat, to berry in the seclusion of his retreat at "La Source," in France, the reflection on a wasted life and a misspent career.

Still he pined for the invigorating atmosphere of political life, and, having succeeded in getting the "attainder" removed in 1723, he settled in England, and at once joined in the polemical discussions which at that time raged with a vehemence and fury unknown to the more sedate annals of later years. Bitter, sarcastic, venomous, and polished, his pen was destined to write a fresh page in the history of his day; and he was indefatigable—column after column in the Craftsman was filled with emanations from his fertile brain, and what writings they were! His "Dissertations upon Parties," to quote one of many, stands unapproached, perhaps unapproachable, as the finest political composition of the eighteenth century, the "Letters of Junius" alone excepted. Such was his town life. At his country scat "the restless and acrid controversialist is transformed into the most delightful of social companions." There, in company with Pope, Swift, Voltaire, and many others of lesser note in the world of letters, he atoned by the simplicity of his existence for the errors, the meannesses, the backslidings of his political life. But once again the scene is changed. In debt and difficulties, Bolingbroke finds it desirable, or rather unavoidable, that he should quit England, and he withdrew to the Continent; but the retirement and seclusion of a literary career ill-suited his active spirit, and he soon entered the arena of political strife. Though, however, he lent a powerful aid in the overthrow of the Ministry of the day, when he arrived in London he found the posts in the new Cabinet already filled up, and he withdrew to Battersca to "swallow the dregs of life." Broken in health, irritable even to ferocity, his visitors became, as a consequence, less and less frequent—he had but to die. Thus on December 12, 1751, passed away Henry St. John Viscount Bolingbroke.

The story of his life is written by Mr. Collins with evident care and with marked literary acumen. The essay is interesting, instructive, and pregnant with significance. The lesson is clear and unmistakeable; it is this, that no talents however great, no capacity however vast, no position however exalted, will protect their possessor from that contempt and contumely which dog the steps of an unscrupulous statesman, an intriguing diplomatist, an unprincipled senator.

The rest of Mr. Collins' brochure is devoted to an examination of the circumstances attendant on the visit to this country of M. Voltaire, the great French "litterateur," Space precludes anything more than a cursory allusion to this second essay. It must suffice to say that it is interesting to a degree, if only in so far as it throws light upon the wonderful power of the ill-shaped, satirical, but incomparably able foreigner, who, after a residence of a few months in the metropolis of Great Britain, was enabled to write in the English tongue works so pure in diction, so eloquent in language, that they stand second to few of the compositions of the last century, rich as it was in poets, wits, and authors. But then nation has only produced one Voltaire.

NATIONAL REVIEW.*

Chaucer, or rather his "Wife of Bath," tells us a story pertinent to Mrs. Lynn Linton's article (the first in the present number of the National) on the "Future Supremacy of Women." A knight, having committed some grievous offence, was condemned to be put to death, unless he could, within the faëry period of a year and a day, find out what was the thing which women loved most. Returning at the end of the term, after vain cogitation, to his doom, he encountered an ancieut beldame, who, "under promise of marriage," admitted him to a knowledge of the secret. "Power," said she, "is what women mest desire." Just so, Mis. Linton. "Every woman," she assures us, "is at heart a tyrant; and the joy of forbidding is equal in her to that of commanding." Fortified by such excellent authorities, and intending to be lords of creation, in the realm of politics, if not in the domestic castle, we entirely share the fair essayist's opinion that the Franchise is not for women; and her testimony is the more valuable because (as the editors wisely remind us) she is "an avowedly advanced Liberal," and because the question is one on which some Conservative statesmen are well known to be weak-kneed. They will probably see much in this really valuable paper to lead them to look at the subject in a different light from that in which it has been placed before them by the "men in petticoats" whose activity, in matters which the unsophisticated wisdom of our ancestors considered unsuitable to the natural delicacy of their sex, is one of the least satisfactory phenomena of our present social state.

Having disposed of one proposed amendment in our "glorious" Constitution, we were distressed to learn, on the authority of "X." that the said Constitution is in no one respect "glorious," but, in all, decidedly the reverse. The solution of the problem presented by "X." would, like some of those represented by the same letter in algebra, lead us too far afield; but he is justly severe on the pull-devil-pull-baker system yelept party Government, and well shows how impossible it is, under it, to have that consistency in our Foreign policy which can alone make England, as a nation, respected, and trusted, by other Powers. The paper would be well worth reading were it only for the paragraphs in which this 'is convincingly set forth.

The burning question, how best to bring about the unity of an Empire which Mr. Gladstone has done his best to disrupt, is the theme of Mr. Frederick Wicks's intelligent article on "the Confederation of the Empire." To a direct representation of the Colonies in the House of Commons, or even in that of the Lords, the writer prefers an assembly of Colonial representatives (probably delegates chosen by the various Colonial Legislatures) sitting in London under the presidency of the Colonial Secretary for State for the time being. The idea is not altogether new, but has always struck us as possessing more than average merit, because it is, like our own Constitution, possessed of more than average flexibility.

From the flood of works connected with Ireland, which is now inundating us from all sides, a selection must be made. Mental digestion will not suffice to assimilate the whole 'boiling.' We are, therefore, glad to be able to commend to the attention of our readers the article on "The Future of Ireland," which "An Irishman," evidently well acquainted with his subject, has contributed to the present issue. We find therein, admirably advocated, the opinion which we have always maintained. Strengthen the law-enforcing machinery, by measures no matter how stringent; no impolicy is so great as that of paltering in the least degree with rebels in open resistance to the law.

Perhaps, among modern quasi-deified men, not one deserved cannisation less than the habitual "house-devil" (to use a German phrase) Carlyle; and Mr. Oxenham has done well in "showing up" the more than contemptible character of Carlyle's pet hero, Frederic of Prussia: a compound of military genius, cruelty, and insincerity, in which the last named element predominated. Carlyle prostrated himself before Frederic's genius, as Napier, in his history, did before that of Bonaparte, "without a consideration of the damnable and damning iniquity" of his proceedings.

Miss Gordon Cumming's usual pleasant style is conspicuous in her "Sunny Days in Malta"; but we notice that she gives a qualified assent to the belief of the Maltese that their island was the "Melita" of St. Paul. We had thought that this myth

The sad story of Marie Louise, the second wife of Napoleon, is narrated by Lady Bloomfield in a rotice ("An Episode in History") of M. De Saint Arnaud's book, "Les Beaux jours de l'Impératrice Marie Louises" recently reviewed in these columns (Allen's Indian Mail, 1886, p. 338); while Mr. L. Katscher contributes an interesting and, for the advocate of small holdings, exceedingly suggestive, account of "Rural Tuscauy."

We think the bi-metallic question the nearest approach, in the hopelessness of its solution to the general satisfaction, to the task of making ropes out of sea-sand, assigned by Michael Scott to the demon for whom he had to find employment; and, in the interests of the thousands of Anglo-Indians who, owing to its difficulties, are being habitually muleted of a third of their income, we sincerely wish that it could be consigned to the same quarter. Mr. Clarmont Daniell has not, like the celebrated brated

"Mr. Parker, Made that darker, Which was dark without."

But when "The Chancellor said, I doubt," he expressed, as regards the case then before him, what most people feel as to bi-metallism. Still, Mr. Daniell's article gives facts as well as arguments; and it is—what may truly be said of every paper in this issue of the National—well worth reading.

THE ILLUSTRATED NAVAL AND MILITARY MAGAZINE.+

In this number the Record of the Victoria Crosses won before Schastopol is continued, the gallant deeds of Colonel Matthew Dixon, R.A., Captain De Courcy Hamilton, and of Privates W. Coffey and John Byrne, each receiving an appropriate meed of praise. The war in Ireland, narrated in the "Parliamentary Generals of the Civil War" was, after Cromwell's departure, little more than an episode. Major Walford has, indeed, not been able to ascertain with precision either the date or the locality of the last conflict. The scene will now shift to this side of the last conflict. The scene will now shift to this side of the last conflict. The scene will now shift to this side of St. George's Channel.

We turn to a topic peculiarly interesting to our readers in referring to Herat, the gallant defence of which, by Eldred Pottinger, in 1837-8, is the subject of an excellent paper by Mr. Wollaston. It was in August, 1837, that young Pottinger, then a Lieutenant of Artillery, entered Herat, a menth or two before the Shah of Persia, estensibly irritated by Afghan slave driving, but really egged on by the Russians, determined to punish the Heratee Ruler, Shah Kamran, and take his city as that of a revolted vassal. Kamran was absent; but Pottinger, who had entered the place disguised as a Musulman, "with the keen sagacity of a diplomatist, discerned the danger to British interests which the fall of Herat portended, while, with the quick eye of a soldier, he at of Herat portended, while, with the quick eye of a soldier, he at once saw that he might be of use in aiding and directing the defence of the town." He hesitated no longer where his countries interests are the same and also longer where his countries interests. try's interests were concerned; and, alandoning his disguise, became the life and soul of the defence. The difficulties were great; came the file and soul of the defence. The dimensions were great if for, when the Persians first appeared, the defences were in such a state that the place, notwithstanding its strength, "might have been carried by assault the very first day that the attacking force encamped outside the ramparts;" while, as to the town, without was fighting and within were fears, and not fears alone, but trachery the state of the county. The target of the county of the state of the county. rife, and ready at any moment to open the gates to the enemy. I hat an unaccredited, and comparatively inexperienced, lieutenant should, during a siege of many months, have been able to establish and to maintain such an ascendency over the turbulent Afghan soldiery, and over the scarce less turbulent population of the town, is simply wonderful, and is perhaps the most brilliant "illustration" of a war more than usually fruitful in deeds of unwonted prowess. The story is well, and even picturesquely, told, while the numerous full page illustrations enable the reader those while the numerous full-page illustrations enable the reader tho-roughly to realise the scenes described.

We come nearer home when we deal with the late naval manauvres at Milford Haven, to which Mr. Arthur Grey devotes a very clear, readable, and well illustrated paper. No man in the navy is more capable than Admiral Hewett of making such evolutions fruitful in experiences, or of utilising these when acquired.

Few things receive, in proportion to their importance, less attention than the soldier's dress in warm climates; and on this subject Colonel Tulloch contributes some very sensible sugges-tions, the more valuable because derived from his own personal experience. Admiral Ingram, in a narrative of his veyage in the Actaon in 1837, gives an account, now slightly out of date, of a visit to Pitcairn Island; and the notices of the Courts in the "Colinderies" are continued, dealing with Cyprus and the Mauritius, the latter including the Scychelles. These islands, by the way, contain a harbour, as yet wholly unfortified, which may be ranked among the finest in the world, and which, in view of recent French proceedings in Madagascar, is of all but unrivalled importance.

The Editorial article deals at length with the very serious charges brought against the honesty of the officials in the Ordnance Department; and the writer is of opinion that the proposed inquiry will be a mere whitewashing farce (probably a Chelsea Hospital Mutual Laudation Committee!). We hope not; and are much in error if such grave charges can be so easily "burked." But that a Royal Commission should be issued, thoroughly to investigate the whole matter, we cannot doubt.

THE ARMY AND NAVY MAGAZINE.*

In the present number of the above magazine the trans'ation of Baron v. d. Goltz's "Nation in Arms" is continued. The portion now translated, if in some respects a little too technical in detail to interest the ordinary reader, contains many a hint which our military authorities would do well inwardly to digest. The author clearly shows, as regards the two subjects with which the stranger which the stranger which the in the author clearly shows, as regards the two subjects with which in the extracts before us, he deals, the entire change which the increased motive power of troops conferred by railways has effected in their concentration, the alteration in the whole character of battles which arms of precision have brought about, and the supersession of espionage, as the "eye of the army," by cavalry. On all these topics he has much to say which is in a high degree suggestive, and gives many wise saws and modern instances in support of his conclusions.

More vitally important to the denizens of these islands than More vitally important to the denizens of these islands than any precepts, however excellent, on the art of war are the considerations connected with their own "to be or not to be," which are brought out from the French—or, if the phrase be preferable, Continental—point of view in the continuation of Mr. Gordon Cumming's translation of Gabriel Charmes's work on "La Réforme de la Marine." That, a metamorphosis, greater than any recorded by Ovid, is destined to take place in the character of payal comparis is made abundantly clear. No larger are we to recorded by Ovid, is destined to take place in the character of naval combats is made abundantly clear. No longer are we to have the blockades, the elaborate manœuvres of fleets numbering by dozens their component vessels. Even ramming will occupy but a secondary place. The ship of the future is a small, handy, very swift, torpedo vessel. A squadron of these could destroy any fleet, as a few hornets can kill any number of horses. And, if a fleet of warships can thus be annihilated, what is said about the mercantile vessels on whose safety and regularity the United Kingdom depends for its supplies of provisions, and without which its existence, as an independent State, for even six weeks, would be problematical? independent State, for even six weeks, would be problematical? We have urged these considerations again and again; but space has always failed us to bring out, as is here done, every point connected with this all-important subject. M. Charmes writes with no bias against England, nor have any of his sentiments received stronger expression from himself than has already been given them by the distinguished author of the too-forgotten "Battle of Dorking," whom he rightly credits with "the prophetic instinct of a far-seeing mind." "There are now," he tells u; "only two methods of warfare, that of pursuit on the open sea, and a coast warfare against undefended towns." The consequences of the latter mode of warfare, if combined, as it would be, with the suspension, or entire destruction of our compares and the the suspension, or entire destruction, of our commerce, and the consequent starvation of a country whose whole subsistence is practically derived from outre mer, are too horrible to contemplate. We can only hope that readers will endeavour to realise them in perusing M. Charmes' words, clothed, as they are, in English so good as almost to forbid the idea that one is perusing a translation.

It is a relief to turn from these sombre reflections to the lighter parts of the Magazino, though the narrative, opportunely revived in Mr. Hooper's article, how near the French were (in 1689) in obtaining a footing in Bantry Bay, may be profitably read as a "serious" warning to us to look to our P's and Q's. The Alexander-Selkirk-like residence of a French slave-trader named Alexander-seight residence of a French slave-trader named Chémazy, who was left on the (British) Island of Providence, near the Seychelles, is very well told by Captain Oliver; while Mr. Lloyd contributes an interesting, if not altogether novel, story, "Whose gift?" concerning the jealousy which separated, and the affection which duly reunited, a newly-married couple.

LADY BURTON'S edition of her husband's "Arabian Nights," translated literally from the Arabic, will shortly be issued by subscription to the public. It will consist of six volumes, demy octavo, of about 500 pages each, handsomely bound in white and gold. The price will be three guineas. Lady Burton's object is to secure for the public, especially for her own sex and for scholars who have not subscribed to the original edition, the advantages of this Oriental masterpiece—the English reading, the knowledge of Eastern life, and perfect workmanship—which has been so heartily raised by the Press and by scholars. #### THE ANNEXATION OF BURMA.

TO THE EDITOR.

SIR,—In continuation of this subject, I will only say a few final words. The annexation is now an accomplished fact, even though as Mr. T. R. Buchanan, M.P. for West Edinburgh, asserts in a letter to the Scotsman of the 9th instantial of R. Churchill determined upon and ordered the annexation of the country without consulting the Indian Council at all." The italics are Mr. Buchanan's, and this proves, as I have often The italies are Mr. Buchanan's, and this proves, as I have often pointed out already both in the home and Indian Press, that the public money is simply squandered to the tune of something like £30,000 per annum, or more, on a Council the members of which are entirely ignored whenever the caprice and party feeling of the Indian Secretary of State lead him to act according to his own sweet will and pleasure. I think every official well versed in Burman affairs was against annexation at prosent; but they would have been pleased and quite satisfied if a strong Resident had been placed at Mandalay, a proper palace built for him, on the death of the late King Mengdoon Meng, on 2nd October, 1878, and supported by one English Regiment, two Sepoy Regiments, one mountain battery, with elephants and ponies, one gunboat, and an escort of selected Indian sowars mounted upon Burman ponies; the shoe and umbilical prostration question for ever abolished, and daily intercourse between the king and the representative of the Queen-Empress insisted upon. In a few years we might have done as we liked in the country, gradually introducing English magistrates and a thoroughly efficient and well-organised Indian military police force. The Burmans will not for many a long year be fit for disciplined soldiers; all discipline and civilised clothing are most irksome to them. The experience of the Pegu Light Infantry Battalion proved this beyond cavil in Lower Burma, when it was nearly as backward in civilisation as is Upper Burma to-day. official well versed in Burman affairs was against annexation at Burma to-day.

Annexation, then, having been accomplished, it becomes our bounded duty to do our best for the country, and to slay as few Burmans as possible, because they are really only fighting against us as they think we are invaders of their territory, and have unlawfully, by sheer force, deposed and deported their king.

Pouring in British troops under a most expensive system of Pouring in British troops under a most expensive system of command is not the best way to settle such an unexplored and iungly country, many portions of which are in their present state climatically deadly for British soldiers, and these last are not qualified for hunting wild men through trackless forests and hill regions. On the other hand, we should pour in a large force of selected Indian military police; well-officered, suitably clothed and equipped, they with Burmese assistance would in a few days run themselves up excellent bamboo and wood huts, costing nothing but labour, as the material is plentiful all around. These should be stationed in strong detachments all over turbulent districts, each detachment to be in touch one with the other, a portion of each to be mounted on Burman ponies the other, a portion of each to be mounted on Burman ponies for cavalry work, and with each detachment there should be a qualified magistrate to dispense evenhanded justice. No artillery would be required, but apparatus for blowing up stockades should be supplied, with competent trained men to work them, and a supplied, with competent trained men to work them, and a supply of rockets should also be furnished. Then roads, rail, and canal works should at once be commenced, and a good system of equal taxation introduced under a cadastral survey of the whole of the new country, and the frontier line at once determined and marked out. The money that would be good by adopting this proton in line of the that would be saved by adopting this system, in lieu of the regular military style now contemplated, would go a long way towards carrying out these needful public works. Mengdoon Meng, the late king, was a fairly good engineer, and he made the ground around Mandalay the most fertile tract of land I have ever seen anywhere, and now by our neglect the banks of his splendid carels more which a degree man on popies might. his splendid canals, upon which a dozen men on ponies might, is splendid canais, upon which a dozen men on ponies migut, if I recollect rightly, have ridden abreast for many miles, have been broken down by the rise of the Irrawaddy, owing to the melting of the snows on the mountains amidst which that river has its origin. That this might happen was well known to every resident at Mandalay, of any nationality. The king did all his work on the system of the corvée, so well explained in minister known to history.

In conclusion, I would earnestly solicit Lord R. Churchill, as he is the only true reformer in the Conservative or Tory democratic party, and has found the weak side of the present Prime Minister, to insist upon the abolition of that fifth wheel to the Indian coach, the Home Indian Council, root and branch, and widen the base of representative government at Calcutta and Simla, abolishing at the same time the separate governments of Madras and Bombay, with the separate military commands, and place Burma under the Colonial Office, like Ceylon and the Straits Settlements. This would be a large instalment of the noble Lord's promised reforms, when at Blackpool on January 24th, 1834, he knocked so loudly at the door of office.

I was present in the special gallery of the House of Commons last night during the Burma debate, and I wish to point out that the report of that debate is garbled in the Times of this morning. Steps, however, will be taken to have that speedily remedied, I trust, for the people of India must be shown who cratic party, and has found the weak side of the present Prime that the report of that debate is garvied in the rimes of this morning. Steps, however, will be taken to have that speedily remedied, I trust, for the people of India must be shown who are their truest friends. It will simply be one of the most unjust acts ever done to the poorest people in the world if an additional nine or ten millions of debt are thrown upon their shoulders, already burdened with more than they can bear. I feel that those who desired to annex Upper Burma, whoever they may be, should be made to pay the expenses. I maintain that India has not even been repaid the expenditure incurred on former Burmese wars, all undertaken upon the flimsiest pretences. I shall hold this opinion till the contrary is proved-

I am, Sir, your obedient servant,
A. R. GLOAG, Lieut.-General,
Late Commanding R.A., B.B.D.

NEWSPAPERS AND MAGAZINES FOR MIS-SIONARIES.

TO THE EDITOR.

SIR,-Will you kindly give me space for a few words on behalf of our missionaries? I want to ask people who have no further use for their old newspapers and magazines to post them regularly to some one or more of our missionaries.

I will gladly furnish the name and address of a missionary—together with postal rate, &c.—to anyone who will write to me and enclose a "stamped envelope" for reply.

Between three and four thousand newspapers and magazines Between three and four thousand newspapers and magazines are now being regularly sent abroad by friends of our society (Mission Parcel Society), but we receive more requests for "reading matter" than we can supply.

The letters of missionaries testify how thoroughly this little act of kindness is appreciated. One says:—

"Do you know the help given by letting me have newspapers, &c., is more than can be expressed. I am encouraged to be 'up and doing' by seeing what others are doing."

Another says:—

"Both I and my people have derived much pleasure from the perusal of such papers and magazines as our kind friends have

"Both I and my people have derived much pleasure from the perusal of such papers and magazines as our kind friends have sent us from 'home,' and many an otherwise dull hour has been made bright through receiving them.

"With our people no newspaper is ever old, and one of last year's date is almost as eagerly sought after as that printed a month ago. These, especially illustrated ones, are passed from hand to hand, and in some instances are given to the most learned man of the settlement, who reads to a crowd of very attentive listeners. Some have at times asked me for papers wherewith to paper their room, saying that they wanted them in order that they might have something by them to read. Papers, therefore, of all kinds never come amiss."

To those who cannot undertake to post papers regularly (only occasionally),names of hospitals, orphanages, clubs, and reading rooms (abroad or at home) can be given where such papers and magazines will be gladly welcomed.

Mr. Sagain is now the quietest district in Upper Burma. The traveller has settled down steadily to his new duties, and is showing all the energy and dogged pertinacity to which he owed his former successes. He is quite "the man for Galway," and Sir Charles Bernard may be congratulated upon having selected him for "dministrative work in our new province.

INDIA IN PARLIAMENT.

THE debate which took place in the House of Commons on Monday last, when Mr. S. Smith moved an amendment on the Address, expressing "regret at the continuation of military operations in Burma, and representing that the expenses of the said war should not be borne exclusively by Indian finances," was more extraordinary than edifying. It was certainly a new experience to the House to find so many honourable members expressing an absorbing interest in Indian affairs and a catholic sympathy with that much misunderstood and much misrepresented entity-the Indian tax-payer. Mr. S. Smith claims to be an authority on all Indian questions, however complex or varied, because he lately renewed his acquaintance with the country during a cold weather tour, but we were not prepared for the knowledge of, and interest in, such questions as that displayed by Messrs. Buchanan, Cremer, Blane, Illingworth, A. O'Connor, Dr. Tanner, and last of all, but not least of all, by Mr. Henry Labouchere. Sir George Campbell certainly lent whatever weight his views have in the House to the side of the Opposition by "doubting the desirability of annexation" with regard to Upper Burma, but as Sir George has doubts about most things upon the earth, above it or in the waters underneath, his opinions do not require to be very seriously considered. The whole aim and object of the gentlemen who supported Mr. Smith's amendment could not be concealed, being nothing more or less than an attempt to obstruct and hinder the public business. They cared as little about Burmaor the Indian tax-payer as they cared about the condition of the North Pole, but it was easy to talk cheap philanthropy and pose as the friends of the oppressed Indian tax-payer. The word "annexation" appears always to have a terrible meaning for certain people who like to preach moral aphorisms from platforms upon which there is seldom room for common sense or practical experience. There are writers and orators of this school who still lament the annexation of Oudh and of the Punjab as political crimes, for which England has deserved the wrath of Heaven. To point to the state of peace and prosperity which have in those Provinces succeeded to anarchy, cruelty, and distress is useless. The philanthropists, who are friends of every country but their own, reply that a moral wrong was done in the first instance, and that no plea of political expediency can right a moral wrong. Lower Burma since it came under British protection has flourished in every way, and the future of Upper Burma is even now full of hope. By the overland mail just to hand we learn that "notwithstanding the general depression in trade and the disturbing effects of the third Burmese war, the aggregate value of the trade of British Burma in 1885-86 shows an increase of 10.61 per cent. over that of the previous year." The Indian tax-payer is not troubling himself as to the heavy burdens which, according to Mr. S. Smith and his friends, a bloodthirsty, plundering, and unjust British Government are about to lay upon him. In a few years the trade with Upper Burma will not only repay the cost of the present war, but will pour in money in profitable thousands to the coffers of the Indian Exchequer. Honourable Members who carp at annexation and rail at British rule in the East know all this well enough. Their object is a party one, and India is merely made a stalking-horse for the occasion. But it is, nevertheless, to be regretted that when Indian questions arise in Parliament there should be such an exhibition of "wrong-headedness" and malevolence as that displayed on Monday night. It is, however, fortunate for India that her interests are not altogether under the control of "Honourable Members."

"VOICE OF INDIA." THE

INDIA.

There are in England large classes willing and anxious to do justice to India, but they find it very difficult to know how to act. They complain that Indian questions are intricate; that the opinions of official experts are contradictory; and that the people of India are dumb, and do not give expression to their needs. This defect is now remedied by publishing month. If the Indian questions are all that is now remedied by publishing month. If the Indian public Opinion in England, which provides a compendium of all that is most valuable in the native journals throughout India on the leading topics of the day. The Voice of India thus gives forth a clear sound, interpreting between the rulers and the ruled, and making known the true wishes and feelings of the Indian people.

The Magazine advocates no views of its own. It seeks only to reflect with care and accuracy the views set forth in the native press. The Indian people are naturally doelle and consorvative; and it will be seen that the writings thus brought before the English public are characterised by a knowledge of facts, and generally by practical good sense and moderation. No doubt grievances are from time to time being set forth; but it is a policy of prudence, no less than of justice to give these grievances a fair constitutional hearing. Accordingly, it is hoped that this publication will be subscribed for by Members of Parliament and other public men destrous of dealing with Indian questions, and that the facts thus brought together in a convenient form will be of value to journalists and other public writers. It is specially desired to bring the Magazino before the public in Clube, Reading-rooms, Libraries, and Institutes throughout England, with a view to promote a sustained and intelligent interest in the welfare of our Indian Empire, comprising as it dees 220 millions of our fellow-subjects.

THE HON. W. W. HUNTER proceeds home next week on short leave.

The travelling members of the Finance Committee having finished their business at Naini Tal, have left for the plains. The president stays two days at Mount Abu and reaches Poona on the 25th. Mr. Westland and Colonel Filgate stopped at Allahabad. They reach Nagpur on Thursday, and, after remaining there till the following Monday, join Mr. Elliott on the 26th. At Poona Mr. Bliss, too, rejoins the Committee.

THE members of the Finance Committee, Mr. Westland and Colonel Filgate, during their short visit to Allahabad, chiefly devoted their time to inquiring into the expenditure of the public offices, especially those of the High Court and the Press Department.

The Calcutta Chamber of Commerce have addressed a memorial to the Viceroy, urging the adoption of bi-metal-lism as giving that fixity of values which affords the safest basis for legitimate trade.

THE Bombay Municipal Corporation have passed a resolution that the chairman should be requested to ask Government on what terms it would be prepared to hand over all the land in the Oval near the Prince of Wales's Statue, on the understanding that, with the exception of the portion required for the new Municipal Offices, it should be maintained for as a place of public recreation.

It is rumoured that the East Indian Railway Company will take over the management of the Eastern Bengal State line on the completion of the Hooghly Bridge.

COLONEL CONWAY GORDON, manager of the North-Western System of Railways, has submitted to Government a scheme for the formation of a Railway Service Corps for frontier service in case of emergency.

It is under consideration to place the administration of the Punjab Frontier Force directly in the hands of the Commander-in-Chief through the office of the Military Secretary, instead of combining the work with that of the rest of the Bengal Army in the office of the Adjutant-General. The question has not yet been decided.

It is proposed to erect a memorial to the late Major Willans, who was so long and so honourably associated with the Assam Government, and the sad circumstances of whose death are still fresh in the public memory.

It is quite possible that the troubles in Nepal are not quite over, as an influential Nepalese wood contractor is under trial at Darjeeling on sundry charges of treasonable correspondence with the fugitive Nepalese princes (sons of the late Jung Bahadur), who are now at Patna.

THE Gwalier troops operating against the descrits in the direction of Jhansi have succeeded in capturing the most notorious of the leaders, Masboot Singh, together with fourteen of his gang.

Various parts of Sylhet are suffering severely from the floods. In many places the water is higher than in the great flood of 1883. Several villages are deserted, the houses being submerged. The price of rice is rising rapidly, and this threatens to become a serious matter. Some gardens are now unable to obtain rice locally.

SIR OLIVER ST. JOHN, the Governor-General's Agent in Beluchistan, is endeavouring to secure the arrest of Jam Ali, the rebel son of the Jam of Lus Beyla, who escaped from Sibi some time ago and took refuge with Shukar Khan, a Mongol Chief at Wad, some thirty-two miles south of Khozdar.

THERE are serious floods in Assam owing to the Brahmaputra having overflowed its banks. Much destitution prevails among the ryots.

THE official stay at Ooty, it is stated, is in future to be limited to the three hottest months in the year.

Mr. Gibbons, a planter, has been sentenced to one year's imprisonment by the Calcutta High Court, and to pay a fine of Rs. 1,000 for forging the name of a coolic.

A CALCUTTA paper understands that the Salaries Commission has submitted its report to Government, but not without considerable friction among its members.

The annual return of the shooting of the Bombay Native Army in the annual course of muskery for 1885 86 has been published in General Orders. The result is satisfactory, though the Infantry sppears to have been allowed to complete their training according to the old rules. The shooting of two Cavalry corps and three Infantry battalions is reported to be "good"; of two Cavalry and eleven Infantry to be "moderate"; and that of one Cavalry and six Infantry is considered "bad," while three Cavalry and six Infantry remain unexercised. The average shooting of the whole Presidency, both Cavalry (68:26) and Infantry (106:78), is described as being "moderate."

Notes of the Week.

Last night's London Gazette announces the official appointment of the Right Hon. Robert Bourke "to be Governor of the Presidency of Fort St. George at M dr 18 in the East Indies."

THE same Gazette notifies the appointment of Mr. Andrew Scoble, C.B., to be an Ordinary Member of the Council of the Governor-General of India in succession to Mr. Courtenay Peregrine Ilbert, C.S.I., C.I.E.

It is also further announced that "the Queen has been graciously pleased to confer the decoration of the Imperial Order of the Crown of India on Georgiana Viscountess Cross, wife of the Right Hon. Richard Assheton Viscount Cross, GC.B., Her Majesty's Secretary of State for India."

THE Times of this morning publishes a telegram from Constantinople conveying the extraordinary intelligence that "In some quarters it is believed that the British Government aims at the establishment of a new Arabic Power which would reopen the dangerous conflict of claims to the Islam Caliphate and so agitate the whole Mussulman world." What does it all mean, and what is to be understood by "some quarters?" The Times correspondent is evidently in earnest though mysterious, for he states that he has been specially asked (by whom?) "to contradict the assertion in the most positive terms, and he says that the Porte is about to do the same pub. licly. At the same time it is mentioned that the report is an absurd fabrication which "extreme morbid sensitiveness" alone gives attention to. It may appear strange to some people, who are not newspaper correspondents, that all this trouble should be taken to contradict a rumour which is an "absurd fabrication," and which nobody in England probably heard of until this morning's contradiction of it.

But this is the season when "disquieting rumours' become the prerogative of the Press. Another rumour of threatening import to England is to the effect that a proclamation has been secretly issued in the Punjab calling upon the Sikhs to unfold the Khalsa banner, and turn against the English, as a Russian host, headed by the Maharajah Dhuleep Singh, is on its way to do battle with the British, and to reconquer the Punjab for the benefit of its former owners. Certain journals here have made the most of this precious information, as if its trath was a consummation to be devoutly wished for. But the wiser Sikh makes merry over it, and continues to be faithful to his British salt. The Maharajah Dhuleep Singh has as much influence with the Sikhs of the Punjab as Mr. Lalmohun Ghose has with the Princes and Peoples of India, to whom he has-following illustrious example-issued an open Proclamation.

Hs is revisiting India to explain the cause of his defeats at Deptford, and to assure all India that the "masses" in England are not to be charged with disloyalty to a candidate who would give Home Rule to Ireland and India to the Bengali Babú. These "masses," he knows, take the deepest interest in Indian matters and have the strongest sympathies with the Indian people, whose wrongs they will put to rights as soon as they return Mr. Lalmohun Ghose to Parliament. But not sooner.

GENERAL CHESNEY has not been long in making his mark in India in the direction of retrenchment of military expenditure. He has, it is said, given his approval of a proposal before the Finance Committee, to abolish the Staff salaries attached to the various grades of the Military Accounts Department. A first grade accountant draws, for instance, at present 1,000 rupees a-month in addition to the Staff Corps pay of his rank. In future the pay of the appointment alone is to be drawn, pay of rank being dropped. This is the principle which obtains in the case of military officers appointed to the Police in the three Presidencies.

THE entire Press of India speaks in terms of the highest satisfaction of the new appointment to the Governorship of Madras. The Pioneer says:—"The Hon. Robert Bourke will have every reason to be satisfied with the way in which his appointment has been generally received in India, whilst Madras may be congratulated on possessing in her new Governor a man in almost every respect a contrast to Sir Grant Duff. Mr. Bourke makes no pretence to be a scholar, is neither pedagogue nor dreamer. But he is eminently well versed in public affairs, is an admirable man of business, practical, sensible, open, and honest. Moreover, he has a good presence, a genial, kindly manner, and a warm heart. Whether he will prove himself equal to grappling with the multitudinous difficulties bequeathed to him by his predecessor remains to be seen.'

It is hard, however, on the late Governor of Madras that, leaving the troubles of his Presidency behind him, he should have to satisfy Mr. Jordan, M.P., as to his reasons for visiting the Viceroy at Simla last year, and why he travelled by train instead of going by sea to Calcutta, and waiting for his Excellency there. Mr. Jordan last night sought information on these important points from the Under-Secretary of State for India at "Question" time, but all that Sir J. Gorst could tell him was that "some persons had an objection to a sea voyage." At which the House laughed—at Mr. Jordan.

THE departure from India of Mr. Ilbert has called forth the following from the Indian Mirror concerning that gentleman and Dr. W. W. Hunter, who has taken temporary leave from the East:—"Mr. Ilbert and Dr. W. W. Hunter are the only men among the Viceroy's personal advisers who are above prejudices, and who possess the power so rare in Anglo-Indian officials to keep their heads cool and composed, so as to take a dispassionate view of the many complicated questions in a just and impartial spirit."

LATEST INTELLIGENCE.

CALCUTTA, SEPT. 5.

The announcement that Mr. Bourke has been appointed Governor of Madras has been received with general satisfaction, and a hope is expressed on all sides that he will introduce a more healthy tone into the administration of the Southern Presidency than has prevailed during the last five years. The Iodian Press is unanimous in pronouncing Sir M. Grant Duff's tenure of office a complete failure—a result which is, perhaps, less due to the Governor himself than to the unfortunate selection of his

The Bombay newspapers have published a somewhat acrimonious correspondence between the local Government and the Chamber of Commerce on the one hand and the High Court and the Bar on the other. The Chamber commenced the correspondence by addressing to the Government a complaint regarding the delays addressing to the Government a complaint regarding the delays and expense of litigation. It attributed the delay partly to the fact that the High Court was short-handed, and partly to the length of the vacations and the number of holidays enjoyed by the Judges; while the chief source of the expense was attributed to the heavy fees demanded by the barristers. The Bombay Government, in forwarding the Chamber's letter to the High Court, practically endorsed its views, and hinted broadly that if the Court did not amend its ways it would be forced to do so by legislation. The Court in its reply answered all the allegations, and showed that its vacations exceeded those of allegations, and showed that its vacations exceeded those of the Calcutta and Madras Courts by only three or four days, which it stated it was ready to resign. The Bar also wrote a reply to the attack made upon it. The general opinion would seem to be that the Government and the Chamber had the worst of the controversy

The Madras Chamber of Commerce has addressed a memorial to the Viceroy praying for a reimposition of the cotton import duties. The memorial will doubtless have the support of the Iudian Press and of public opinion, but is not likely to be suc-

President of the Gwalior Council of Regency has announced that, in honour of the installation of the young Maharajah, all the transit duties through the Gwalior State are abolished.

Then, again, rumours are coming in of disturbances in the unjab. It is currently reported there that the Ameer is raising Punjab. new regiments and making warlike preparations on a large scale, either for the purpose of resisting a Russian attack, or, as some reports put it, with a view of subjugating Kafiristan. A Lahore newspaper states that there has been widely circulated in Lahore newspaper states that there has been widely circulated in the Punjab an anonymous vernacular proclamation, calling upon the Natives of that province to sink minor differences and to combine to throw off the yoke of the Feringhee tyrants. The document goes on to announce the arrival of a large Russian army at Herat, en route for India. It states that the Maharajah Dhuleep Singh has joined this force, and that he is accompanying it as leader; and further, that the Ameer, in reply to a British application for hele, has said that he is personally willing to render it, but that his people are unanimously hostile to the British alliance. It finally announces that a collision between the British and Russian forces on the borders of India is imminent, and points out the benefits which will accrue to those who join the Maharajah and the Russians. Probably this proclamation is a forgery, but the use of the Maharajah's name and the fact that it is circulated in the Punjab are significant. the fact that it is circulated in the Punjab are significant.

BOMBAY, SEPT. 10.

The travelling members of the Finance Committee have been engaged here this week taking evidence with closed doors upon the cost of the High Court, the dockyards, the customs, income tax, medical and police dejartments, and also of the Government printing effice. The committee proceed to-day to Poonah, which will be the real centre of the inquiry.

Lord Reay, speaking at some length at Poonah, on the subject of Indian female education assured heaver that the Government toms of the Hindus.

The attitude of the Bonerwals is threatening, and it is believed that it will be impossible to avoid sending an expedition to runish them for their predatory incursions into the Punjab.

ANGLO-INDIAN PRESS.

THE INDIAN CIVIL SERVICE. (Times of India.)

Mr. Ginwalla, the author of the "Parsee Girl of the Period," which made quite as much stir in India as Mrs. Lynn Linton's "Girl of the Period" made at home, sends us, after a long interval; another long contribution on the "Indian Civil Service." Here he is scarcely so well acquainted with his subject, and is certainly not so amusing, but we welcome his contribution because it suggests that "middle course" the advocacy of which now seems most desirable. His letter will probably fall like a bomb-shell among his Native brethren, for he boldly advocates the extreme measure of shutting out the Natives of India altogether from the Covenanted Civil Service, so far as admissions are made from examinations at home. "I quite approve," he says, "of all the momentous political reasons that are urged by those who oppose the wholesale and indiscriminate admission of Natives to the service, on a footing of equality as to rank, grade, status, emoluments, &c., with their British compeers." Whether Mr. Ginwalla is writing in earnest or is mysteriously sarcastic does not much matter. He is right in the long run. The present system is a failure. This year no Native name appeared in the list of successful candidates, and the average since the introduction of the privilege has only been half a candidate per annum. On the whole, we are inclined to agree with him in thinking that "the Mr. Ginwalla, the author of the "Parsee Girl of the Period," the privilege has only been half a candidate per annum. On the whole, we are inclined to agree with him in thinking that "the Government are only sowing the secds of future embarrassments and race antagonism in not boldly announcing the fact that European and Native agency must necessarily be regarded as distinct and separate." The present arrangement is a failure, and the small handful of Natives who have found their way into the Civil Service through it only shows that it has been thoroughly inoperative. The Statutory Civil Service, again, as it is manned at present, has been even less successful. A "middle course" is wanted, and the whole value of Mr. Ginwalla's long paper may at present, has been even less successiul. A "middle course is wanted, and the whole value of Mr. Ginwalla's long paper may be found in one paragraph:—"I, therefore, propose that a separate and independent branch of the Covenanted Civil Service be organised and established in India solely for the Natives, and that all the lower grade appointments be reserved for them to the exclusion of Englishmen. That the branch service shall be subordinate to the main service, and that no Natives be allowed to compete with Englishmen at the Civil Service examination to to compete with Englishmen at the Civil Service examination to be held in England." We scarcely know what our Native reformers will say to this. Many of them, however, see in the necessity for the reduction of expenditure a good chance for urging the for the reduction of expenditure a good chance for urging the larger employment of the Natives of this country, and what is popularly known as the "two-thirds system" has been pretty generally accepted by the Native Press—that is, a Native shall in future be paid only two-thirds of the salary hitherto drawn by a European filling the same post. The difference, however, in the cost of living between the members of the two communities is so great that in time no doubt a "one-third system" will be readily accepted, and then the saving effected will be so marked that our administrators will be tempted to give the Natives ail the appointments they can. This, we maintain, is the true way to political as well as financial reform in India. as weil as financial reform in India.

as well as financial reform in India.

What we want is an extended and improved Statutory Civil Service. In fact, "a Civil Service for India," from which the Government of India should be at liberty to select any man (under certain rules, of course), for any appointment they please, always provided a stipulated number of appointments are held by Civil servants recruited from home. The examinations should be held, as Mr. Ginwalla suggests, in India itself, and University men should be encouraged to take part in them. But we cannot agree with him in thinking that they should, as a matter of course, go home for a period of study. It is absolutely absurd to send men to a foreign country six or seven thousand miles off, in which the habits, customs, religion and language, are wholly at variance men to a foreign country six or seven thousand miles off, in which the habits, customs, religion and language, are wholly at variance with their own, to learn how to administer justice to their fellow-countrymen. If anything could unfit them for it, we should say it would be sending them to Europe. In fact, Europeans are worthless in India until they have resided six or seven years here, simply because they have not the knowledge which we send Native students to unlearn in England. It is quite intelligible for China. Japan, and other Eastern countries to adopt this plan, hereaves they cannot otherwise give their countrymen an insight because they cannot otherwise give their countrymen an insight into how things are managed in Europe, and they have no colleges or universities on the European model, where students can learn the history and languages of the nations with whom they now require to carry on diplomatic relations, and from whom they must take lessons in military science, ship-building, gunnery, &c. But all the arguments in favour of China and Japan doing this are reversed in India where the Government is invested in Euroare reversed in India where the Government is invested in Europeans, who have all they want first-hand. But the question is a big one, and before an Indian Civil Service proper (as apart from the European or exotic Civil Service) could be satisfactorily formed, the Educational Departments in the higher branches would first require reform. The Universities might remain examining bodies; but the Colleges should be residential. If morality and discipline can be introduced into them by any other means—good; but it must be plain to any educationalist that the weakest part of an educational system, conducted solely upon the examining principle, is the want of control and of teaching by examining principle, is the want of control and of teaching by example. To elaborate anything like a system for India with her institution of early marriages, and family domicile and many other social customs which should be of universal application, would be extremely difficult. The alternative, however, debars a whole nation—except perhaps one individual in two years—from entering the higher service of the Crown, and these few must cross the water and go to a foreign country, 6,000 or 7,000 miles off, to unlearn much, if not all, that will be of any practical use to them, and to acquire scientific and technical knowledge, which there is no reason whatever they should not acquire in their own country. no reason whatever they should not acquire in their own country. However great the obstacles to the reform, they ought to be surmounted. India, unless her costly and elaborate system of higher education has been a failure, should now be able to train up her own Secondary Civil Service. This is the reform of the immediate future, and though we will, of course, be roundly abused for our advice, the abuse will be shortlived. Before very long the Native Associations will see, as clearly as we do, in which way the interest of their community really lie. And before long it will be their chief business to insist upon the fact that certain kinds of adminischief business to insist upon the fact that certain kinds of administrative work can be performed by Natives very much more cheaply than by Europeans. The expenditure of the country has to be seriously reduced, and this is the only way in which a really large saving can be effected without loss of efficiency.

COLONEL SIR EDWARD SLADEN. (Rangoon Gazette).

We are quite sure that we shall speak the sentiments of very many of our readers when we express our gratification at the bestowal of Knighthood upon Colonel Sladen. The honour has been long in coming, and its tardy bestowal somewhat diminishes But it is a relief to all to know that it has been granted at last.

Colonel Sir E. B. Sladen is the son of Dr. Sladen, Presidency Colonel Sir E. B. Sladen is the son of Dr. Sladen, Presidency Surgeon of Madras. His first regiment was the Madras Fusiliers, in which he served with distinction during the second Burmese war. He joined the Tenasserim Commission, and was for several years Assistant Commissioner of Maulmain. Whilst in this appointment he married Sophie, daughter of Mr. Harrison, the Accountant-General at Madras. This gentle and estimable lady, by whom he had three children, died in Mandalay, and her grave is the centre of the English cemetery there. On the amalgamation of the two Provinces Captain Sladen was promoted to be Magistrate of Rangoon, where he proved himself to be a most efficient, zealous, and thoroughly popular officer. The town was never in better order than under his rule. Chinese rioters were found working on the roads in prison garb; nor could all entreaties induce the stern magistrate to shorten their term of public punishment, and gharri wallahs found themselves registered, and their offences duly recorded, so that for each additional offence an enhanced punishment was awarded. Jehu so found that discretion was the better part of valour, and became civil and decent. When Captain Sladen was appointed to be the first real Political A gent to Captain Sladen was appointed to be the first real Political Agent to the Court of Mandalay the inhabitants of Rangoon parted from him with real regret, and presented him with a beautiful silver claret jug as a token of their appreciation of his many good

When the rebellion of the Mingoon and Mingodine Princes broke out Sladen was with the King, and was for a time in great personal danger. He afterwards felt it to be his duty to leave the capital, with as many European residents as chose to follow him, and come to Rangoon. This measure was severely criticised in cartain quarters, but it received the unqualified sanction of him, and come to Rangoon. This measure was severely criticised in certain quarters, but it received the unqualified sanction of Government. He returned to Mandalay with Colonel Phayre, to whom he proved of great assistance, though no treaty was extracted from the King. Afterwards, when Colonel Fytche made the attempt, with Sluden's effective assistance, a Treaty, though with the dubious Arms clause, was procured. In accordance with arrangements then made, Sladen proceeded to explore the Trade routes to Yunan—to open up "the gold and silver roads" of commerce. How he showed great personal pluck and perseverance, how he quarrelled with his European colleagues, how he baffled Burmese and Chinese intrigue is a story too long to be related here. It is told in his own words in a pamphlet to be related here. It is told in his own words in a pamphlet published by Government, with all accusations against the Burmese Government carefully eliminated. Now that the Government has ceased to exist, perhaps the expunged paragraphs will be received. will be restored.

On return from this Expedition Sladen ought to have been rewarded. But he got nothing. He left Mandalay, to the delight of King and Court, who had the strongest antipathy to the man who had found them out, followed their duplicity and blood thirstiness, and exposed them. Yet, wonderful to relate, the same Sladen afterwards sought to employ these self-same wretches to rule the country under British sovereignty!

The great object of his ambition was to rule again in Mandalay, The great object of his ambition was to rule again in Mandalay, and Mr. Bernard selected him for the responsible and honourable post of Chief Political Officer. Our opinion of Colonel Sladen in that capacity we and our correspondents have lately recorded, and from those expressions we have nothing to retract. We consider his actions, both with regard to his carelessness about the disarmament of Theebaw's rabble soldiery, and the employment of the treacherous and blood-stained Hloot-daw, to have made to the property blunders such as his praying carear should have been grievous blunders, such as his previous career should have guaranteed him from committing. The evil effects of those measures are still too keenly felt to enable us to soften in the least degree our stern condemnation of them.

But he has left Burma after about thirty years' service; and much as we blame his closing acts, we cannot but rejoice that his Sovereign has recognised his long previous good services, and has rewarded them by this coveted title. We heartily congratulate him, and we feel sure that in the name of all our readers we may wish long life, health, and prosperity to Colonel Sir Edward Bosc

Sladen.

ENGLISH SCHOOLS IN INDIA. (Bombay Gazette.)

Our Simla correspondent informs us that a first-class ladies' school will, in all probability, be opened in Simla next season. Such an enterprise, no doubt, has its origin in the domestic difficulties which arise from the low rate of exchange, and it ought to be welcomed by all who, owing to the depreciation of silver, find it difficult to provide for the education of their children. The necessity of a separation between parents and children has always been one of the greatest drawbacks in Anglo-Indian life. Of late years the grief of parting has been intensified by the thought that owing to the low rate of exchange the expense of maintaining a family in England on Indian earnings is an almost intelerable burden to prevent of medarate means. This precuries intolerable burden to persons of moderate means. This pecuniary evil has now reached a climax, and every Auglo-Indian parent is forced to consider whether there are no means of avoidparent is forced to consider whether there are no means of avoiding or postponing the dread hour of separation. While rupees retain their purchasing power in this country, every one is naturally inclined to spend them here rather than convert them into dearly-bought sovereigns. Among the remedies proposed for the present state of affairs is an increased education of Anglo-Indian children in India. In the case of boys this can be done only to a limited extent. As far as one can see at present, it seems utterly impossible that a great public school with all its invigorating influences can be ever established on the shores of India. India. Boys educated in this country can never, we think, expect to compete on quite equal terms with those who go home and enjoy the opportunities of education afforded by English and enjoy the opportunities of education afforded by English schools. But with girls it is different. They are not ordinarily expected by their parents to prepare themselves by long years of hard study for competitive examinations. If they can only be taught as much English, and French, and German as will enable them to appreciate the literatures of modern Europe, they have enough to fit them to be intelligent members of society from "the humanities" point of view. Their proficiency in music and other enough to fit them to be intelligent members of society from "the humanities" point of view. Their proficiency in music and other graceful additions to their literary education depends chiefly on themselves, and may be almost as easily obtained in India as in England, if they have taste and industry. English girls' schools have not such a very high reputation that residence in them should be considered an indispensable element in a girl's education. In fact, many Anglo-Indian parents whose families are in England prefer not to send their children to school, but think it better that they should be instructed in their temporary English homes by governesses. Thus as far as the education alone is concerned, there is do reason why provision should not be made by which girls should get as good an education or nearly as good an education here as in England. They would have the inestimable advantage of being at a reasonable distance from inestimable advantage of being at a reasonable distance from their parents, an advantage of being at a reasonable distance from their parents, an advantage which might in itself counterbalance many drawbacks. Thus if the climate of Simla is pronounced by medical authority to be as good for growing girls as that of England, there is no doubt that the proposed school if once started, will be extensively appreciated. But on this question of the suitability of climate all depends. We know well enough that for grown-up people the climate of Simla and other hill stations of high altitude is the most delightful in the world, and very healthy. But though the thermometer may be world, and very healthy. But though the thermometer may be nearly as low as in England, the climate of a hill station in the tropics that is cold by its altitude and the consequent rarefaction of the air cannot be quite the same as that of our native country, where the temperature and the seasons are determined by very different conditions. If it could be proved by experience that this difference is after all not material, that Simla is as healthy as Europe for girls the scheme mentioned by our Simle correct. as Europe for girls, the scheme mentioned by our Simla correspondent will be sure of hearty support. And Simla, of course, is not the only station in India in which the experiment might be undertaken with advantage.

A NEW DEPARTURE FOR INDIAN INDUSTRY. (Bombay Gazette.)

The development of the mill industry in Bombay is a process which needs little external encouragement. It goes on apace, and sometimes seems to be quite independent of the remunerativeness of the trade. Profits may rise or profits may fall, but the builders of mills are as busy as ever. In times of depression, people have built "not wisely but too well," but they have built all the same, and the mills have worked too profitably of late to-check the tendency towards extension, and those who are most closely conversant with the trade take the most sanguine view of its future. There are not to more mills we are required. of its future. There are not too many mills, we are sometimes told, provided they are worked with a view to the changing requirements of the market, and provided that prompt advantage is taken of the newest mechanical improvements. This proviso is is taken of the newest mechanical improvements. This provise is brought into new prominence in a circular which Mr. Jamsetji N. Tata has this week addressed to his brother millowners, and the purpose of which may best be described as to urge a new departure upon the trade. They should take advantage, he tells them, of the latest and most approved cotton spinning machinery machinery that will enable them to successfully spin from the indigenous staple a relatively larger quantity of the finer counts of a lower cost and with greater asse. In following this advice at a lower cost and with greater ease. In following this advice the Indian spinners would be following a tendency which has been strongly marked in the history of the trade. Roughly speaking, the Indian mills still turn out only the coarser yarns and the coarser qualities of piece-goods leaving Lancashire to supply the requirements of the country in regard to the finer qualities. The balance, despite the important development of local production, is large enough, the value of the annual imports of English twist and yarns into Bombay being over a crore, while the piece-goods of various kinds which find their way into this country now exceed seven crores a year in value. Still the Indian mills have for some time past aimed higher than they did in the early stage of the industry. They are producing finer yarns and consequently finer piece-goods than in the beginning, Still the when they were content with piece-goods of 16 warp and 21 wert. The average now is more nearly 21 warp and 26 west, and we hear that a well-known mill in this city is now turning out in an hear that a well-known mill in this city is now turning out in an experimental way dhoties of as high counts as 26 warp and 32 weft. Mr. Tata's advice to his neighbours and fellow-millowners is to follow this tendency still further, and he gives good reasons for his advice. The statistical part of his circular may be very well left to them to scrutinise. His comparison of the results of mule spinning and spinning with the ring throstle will be of great interest to them just now, when the relative merits of the two methods are being somewhat as great conversed. The newertwo methods are being somewhat eagerly canvassed. The newer method has perhaps suffered from the large expectations which have been awakened by enthusiastic advocates, but in good hands good results have been obtained from it, and it still has eager champions amongst practical men. Whether the mule or the ring throstle is to be the spinning implement of the future, however, has small immediate bearing upon the larger question to which Mn Tata invites the attention of the trade when he recommends them to join in establishing a mill in Bombay for the production of the finer counts. Since such a mill would necessarily be in a great degree an experiment, we prefer to say absolutely nothing as to the prospects of its success, but it is evident that the successful working of such a concern as this would have an important influence upon the future of the cotton industry of Bombay. It would compete with none of the existing mills, few of which spin counts of yarn as high as thirties. But it would compete with the Lancashire mills, from which not far short of compete with the Lancashire mills, from which not far short of ten crores worth of yarns and piece-goods were last year imported into Bombay. From the Lancashire point of view this might seem a deplorable prospect, but in Lancashire people have not yet risen to the height of unselfi-hness at which they can judge a question in any other light than that of their own interest, as witness Liverpool's determined opposition to the Manchester Ship Canal scheme. Bombay would compete with the English mills with none of the artificial aids to her industry that she was supposed to enjoy in the abelighed import duties, and if English mills with none of the artificial aids to her industry that she was supposed to enjoy in the abolished import duties, and if she gained ground in the competition Lancashire would doubtless accept the situation, and would find means of her own for making the best of it. There is at least as strong an inducement for Bombay capitalists of to-day to invest their money in a mill for spinning thirties and forties as there was a quarter of a century ago for trying the experiment of spinning fifteens and twenties. In the former case the venture was purely experimental. The new venture would be not so much pure experiment as the development of an enterprise already in prosperous working. Cheap labour, which has told in favour of the Indian mills hitherto, would be a point in their favour in the new undertaking, hitherto, would be a point in their favour in the new undertaking, and they would again have the advantage of saving two freights—that upon the raw material sent to England, and that of the manufactured article shipped from England, though upon the more costly class of goods the saving on this account would of course be relatively smaller than upon the cheaper qualities. Looked at from the point of view of commercial policy there is much in the project to awaken public interest. Unless new markets are found in Africa, or in the Gulf, or in the farther East, the time will come when the Indian mill industry will have overtaken—if it has not already nearly done so—the demand for its overtaken—if it has not already nearly done so—the domand for its peculiar products. The glutting of the China markets with Bombay yarn is not an incident in ancient history, and it belongs to a history which might easily repeat itself. To rely exclusively upon China to take our yarns is very much like putting all our eggs into one basket. The basket is large, and for the present it will hold them all. But it is rather fragile, and as we have seen of late, it is sometimes in danger of violent shakings. The Bombay Millowners' Association have talked much about finding new markets for their goods. They are now invited to find new goods for a new market perhaps, but still for one near at hand, whose requirements would be constant, and liable to no violent fluctuation from political causes, at all events. The Indian market for the finer yarns is, as we have shown, wide enough; for fine cloths it offers, to producers who can turn out goods suitable to the Native taste and touch, a field beyond the dreams perhaps of Bombay ambition.

Mr. Tata, however, is content to hasten slowly. The project to which he invites the attention of his fellow millowners is a more which he invites the attention of his fellow millowners is a more modest one than we have seemed to credit him with, in picturing the vast possibilities that lie before the future fine-cloth producer of Bombay. "One thing at a time" is a good rule to follow, even when two promising prospects are in view. It is certain that unless Bombay can succeed in making fine yarns it cannot succesfully produce fine cloth. The experiment therefore will in the first instance be limited to spinning. It will be watched with no small interest, not as a novel addition to the mill enterprises of Bombay, but as an attempt to give an answer to the question whether India can, in a much larger degree than she does now, supply her necessities out of her own industrial resources? Looked at from that point of view it would be difficult to exaggerate the at from that point of view it would be difficult to exaggerate the importance of the project.

THE ABOLITION OF PRESIDENCIES.

(Times of India Correspondent.)

It is contrary to my experience to condemn quacks universally or unreservedly. That pills are often drastic whether they kill or cure is, however, another matter. The abolition of the Presidential form of Government, and the substitution for it of a Provincial Governor, is one of those quack remedies for falling exchange and the military situation which demands careful consideration. It is not the object of this paper to condemn the remedy, but to discuss it. The purge would be strongly recommended by the Provinces of Bengal, North-Western Provinces, and the Punjab. The Governments of those provinces, with their larger population, their more exposed geographical situation, and their more turbulent subjects, have often regarded the privileges and dignity of the presidencies as unnecessary anomalies and survivals of an altered condition of affairs. The public service in the Bombay Presidency would accept the change with no in the Bombay Presidency would accept the change with no disfavour. The risk that a Lieutenant-Governor, born in the service, would carry into the disposal of his patronage the prepossessions and, perhaps, the prejudices of his early career hardly outweigh the prospects offered to the ambitious few, or the certainty of affection for the service which the Lieut.-Governor would carry with him into his high position. A greater promptitude, in the disposal of business, might weigh in the minds of district officers as an argument in favour of the change. The European section of the non-official public would consider that economy settled the question in favour of a change, and the Native community would tion in favour of a change, and the Native community would support it now and regret it at leisure. On the other hand, the powerful, if defensible interests opposed to it would be strong in England. Loss of patronage is a potent lever against any reforms that threaten the substantial influence which English Cabinate and other than the substantial influence which English Cabinets can exert alike over their members and their supporters.

The thoughtful British public would recall the spectacle of the Supreme Government cut off from half of the Indian Empire by Supreme Government cut off from half of the Indian Empire by the conflagration of the mutiny in Northern India. The hold which ideas have upon society was illustrated by the survival of the municipal form and spirit after the Roman municipal constitutions had been shattered, and the unit of a form of government in Western India based precisely upon the model of the Supreme Government, and, like it, in direct communication with the Government of England, is not only an idea but a fact which might have had important political consequences if the course of events in 1857 had extinguished the Supreme Government. Ilistorical titles claim and receive a recognition which icalousy Historical titles claim and receive a recognition which jealousy or rivalry is often unwilling to dispute. If any alternative to the Supreme Government were suddenly required by political convulsions, the Bombay Government, with its traditions and its constitution (let alone the fact of its geographical claims), could constitution (let alone the fact of its geographical claims), could supply it with the least break of gauge or challenge from provincial Governments. This argument in favour of a Presidential Government may seem more fanciful now than it was in the days of Lord Elphinstone. But there is another argument which the events of more recent years have accentuated. Changes have occasionally been proposed by Supreme Governments, which have appeared to a large proportion of official and non-official experience indiscreet and precipitate. Official subordination imposes submission, and the Supreme-Government presents its own case to the Home Government. At such times it is in accordance with British principle that the other side should be heard. The Governor of the presidencies are the only high officials in India who can represent their views direct to the Secretary of State. This is only a small part of the strength of their position. They do not owe their appointments to the Governor-General, or consequently owe him that special deference and consideration which is owed to a patron. The recall of Sir Charles Trevelyan was atoned for by his subsequent elevation. More than once in the history of India, in matters of education, of revenue administration, and of finance, has this power of direct correspondence and independent position sensibly affected the issue. I should be sorry to import meaner considerations into the discussion of a great public question. But it is obvious that the interests of a commercial community like Bombay may be in conflict on matters of railways, of docks, of defence, &c., with the interests of Calcutta. In proportion, as the position of these interests be valuable.

Against the retention of a Governor in Council arguments may Official subordination imposes submission, and the Supreme

Against the retention of a Governor in Council arguments may be taken from the delay and compromise which attends Governments by a board and not by a dictator. But it is, in accordance with the progress of modern ideas, that great questions should be subjected to a slow process of sifting and compromise. A Governor in Council means three experienced heads instead of one for all ordinary matters, and if the highest power is to be concentrated in one head, more must necessarily be left to the secretaries and to the heads of the departments. The sacrifice of the Council cannot then be accompanied by a reduction of these other appointments. It is notorious that the members of Government are engaged in their work from morning till night, and I have had it from the lips of no less than six Governors of Bombay that they never anticipated such a mass of work as they found. The abolition of the Executive Council would doubtless effect economy, although not to the full extent of the salaries of the members: it might expedite business at the cost of deliberation; and it would give Bombay a local Governor, who started on his office with a full acquaintance with Indian problems. On the other hand, the head of the province would lose some part of his independence, and the public would lose a spokesman who commanded the ear of the English Ministry. There would be less deliberation in public affairs, less chance of getting the wheels of state out of an administrative rut, and less deforence to the demands of young India. The traditions of the past would be broken, and, if the Government of India were ever isolated by political catastrophes, the name and the habits of a Government, corresponding in form with the Supreme Government, would be lost. A necessary consequence would be that greater power would be centralised in the Supreme Government which has always interfered more, and regarded itself as more directly responsible, in the administration of the provinces than of the two presidencies. These arguments appear to me to have been oversooked, when an authorty lately advocated the abolition of the Presidency Government as an unquestioned reform. That the change may be required is a matter of opinion, that it is an infallible remedy is one of the advertisements that quacks love to parade before the innocent public. It might be said that I have begged the question. A Lieutenant-Governor selected from England would obviate most of the difficulties raised by my remarks as to Indian prepossessions, and a Council composed of his secretaries would instruct him. Let us examine both partics to this arrangement. The Governor would arrive in the happy state in which a well-known Legislative Member of Council described his feclings after the manner of the Pharisce, "Thank goodness I know nothing about India. Knowledge only prejudices a liberal judgment" The unbiassed Lieutenant-Governor would either be a strong or a weak man. If the latter, one of his secretaries would rule without the sense of public responsibility. If he were strong, and impressed, for instance, with such a forest policy as a late Governor of Bombay enforced, who would withstand him? Would an acting secretary, whose confirmation depended on the Governor's good will, be able to do so if he wished? A Governor, with the sole responsibility for deciding difficult quections of land-settlement, intricate civil appeals, or appeals to the elemency of the Grown from the High Court, and a variety of other technical matters, must not only never be ill or absent from head quarters, but he must always weigh the advice given him. He could not shield himself behind his secretaries, as no quack can increase the hours appointed for the day he would succumb to the work. Then, as regards the secretaries who are to sit in Council, the public apt to criticise hardly pause to consider the office labour of a secretary. He must prepare the case with the impartiality of an advocate for

A PERILOUS VOYAGE.

(Times of India.)

Our Aden correspondent sends us a graphic account of the voyage of the pilgrin steamer Adova from Bombay to Aden. We can sum up his narrative in a few words. The voyage occupied twenty-three days. The delay in reaching Aden was so unusually great, that in Bombay shipping circles it was generally believed the Adova had foundered. The vessel, which was, we hear, specially built for the pilgrim traffic, left Bombay on the 7th of July with the large number of 800 pilgrims on board. She encountered heavy weather and was considerably delayed, and on the 20th July, when she was thirteen days out, she broke down. For the next four days it was impossible to get up steam, and though all hands were busy pumping, the water steadily increased until there was six feet feet of water in the engine-room and stokehole. The firemen lost their heads entirely, but the rest of the crew and all the officers seem to have behaved admirably, and until almost the last the 800 pilgrims kept their senses. They come, as is well-known, from all parts of Asia, and few of them had ever seen the sea before. They are deprived of their arms the moment they go on board, but a ship's crew could, of course, do little against 800 men if a panic had once set in. It was the first business of Captain Allen and his officers to prevent this. The passengers, though, as our correspondent says, they showed "trust and courage," evidently realised the dangers they were in, for they actually subscribed upwards of eight thousand rupees among themselves, and offered it to the captain if he could get their steamer towed by some passing ship. The captain, whose professional reputation was at stake all this time, had to remember the rights of the owners as well as the claims of his passengers. To have signalled to a passing steamer would have entailed a heavy loss in salvage. To have passed a steamer without signalling would have led to an immediate outbreak. He determined, therefore, for fear of a mutiny, to keep well to the north of the usual track. There was plen sufficient for that large number. But for this the captain and the officers are not reponsible. The passengers had been "passed" by the Bombay authoritics, and we have heard so much lately of the unfavourable side of the pilgrim traffic that it is only fair to give full publicity to the gallant conduct of Captain Allen, his officers, and his crew. They had not only to fight against the elements by day and night, but they had to keep a tight hand on 800 turbulent and undisciplined and panic stricken mea, who might have rushed for the boats and overpowered the crew at any moment, and so have entailed certain destruction on themselves. It was a case in which a commander's individual pluck should have been all-powerful, and we venture to think that Captain Allen must be a man of very different calibre from that cowardly Singapore skipper, who three or four years back deserted his ship on the first sign of uneasiness among the pilgrims, and solemnly assured the Alen authorities that she had foundered. In that case in themselves, and after a protracted trial the captain was found guilty of such misconduct as his rarely indeed disgraced the gallant record of our Mercantile Marine. In the case of the Adowa, on the other hand, Captain Allen, Mr. Hopkins and the other officers would all seem to be entitled to the Society's medal for saving life, and we hope that the Marine authorities, after proper inquiries, will make a representation on the subject. To have laboured night and day for ten days together, save the livos of 8000 passengers, is a feat that is worthy of the amplest recognition.

BENGAL.

There has been a remarkable crop of frauds in Government offices in Bengal during the last two years. The Steam Boiler Commission, the 24-Parganas Collectorate, the Chittagong Jail, and the Chittagong Treasury, have all suffered, and now we hear of extensive frauds in the Road Cess Department at Balasore. The Englishman, commenting on the fact, says:—"It is not to be supposed that officers are more careless than they used to be, or that the present system of accounts is more faulty than that which preceded it; indeed, such claborate checks and counterchecks have been devised by the later generation of Accountants-General that fraud might have been thought impossible. We believe that most of the embezzlements are accounted for by the omission of one link in the chain of precautions against the possibility of dishonest misappropriation by subordinates. Does it ever occur to the Government that this link is dropped because the men set to forge the chain are overworked? Work is piled up year by year on the shoulders of district officers without any attempt to ascertain whether the limit which they can safely bear has been reached, and they are only enabled to stagger on under the load by transferring portions of it to less heavily-weighted colleagues and subordinates. But they cannot shift the responsibility in the same way; and when the crash comes, it is on their heads that the Olympian thunderbolt falls. It says much for the loyalty of the Civil Service that Collectors have never united to protest against being made responsible for more than they can properly supervise."

ARRANGEMENTS have been made for introducing into Bengal the system of paying small amounts of land revenue by postal money-order which has met with so much success in the North West Provinces. The experiment is to be tried in the Bardwan and Dakka Divisions to begin with, but will probably be ultimately extended throughout Bengal. The privilege of remitting revenue by money-order will be restricted to estates paying a revenue of not more than Rs. 50 a year, and no more than this sum can be remitted in one order. The chief point of the system is that there will be no cash transactions between the disbursing post-office and the treasury. The post office will have a banking account at the treasury on which the Collector will draw by means of credit notes. The amount of the order will simply be transferred from the head of one account to another, and not a pice will be drawn out of the treasury. The payer of land-revenue will have to do nothing but fill up his form, which includes the "chalan" generally used for personal payments into the treasury and a treasury receipt, hand it in at the receiving post-office, and pay his money; and in due course he will receive, through the post-office, the acknowledgment duly signed by the responsible officer at the treasury. To those who have to make small payments of land rovenue, this will be a most desirable change from the present system, which involves a journey to head-quarters, consultation of mukhtears, fees to writers and unlimited blackmail to clerks and mohurrirs before the would-be payer can get any one to receive the trifling sum due.

LADY GRANT DUFF, three children, and Captain Bagot, A.D.C., have engaged passages in the P. and O. steamer Pekin, to sail about the 20th prox. His Excellency Sir M. E. Grant Duff is going in the same steamer, accompanied by Colonel Mackinnon, as far as Colombo.

It is proposed to hold a grand challenge tent-pegging tournament at Hydrabid, either at the end of October or during the beginning of November, open to all Native and British regiments, battery, gymkhana, or club team. The trophy consists of a very handsome silver cup, valued at Rs. 800, which has been presented by his Highness the Nizam. It is equestrian in design and very artistically executed. The winning team this year will have custody of the cup until next year, when the final challenge will take place.

THERE are at present 372 registered companies in existence in the Madras Presidency, of which 103 have limited liability, 268 work under a guarantee, and only one is unlimited. There are 94 banking or loan companies, six trading companies, three mills and presses, one mining and quarrying company, whilst the majority of the remainder are provident or benefit societies for securing certain payments to their members or their nominees in case of death, marriages, &c. There were two companies which went into liquidation during the year, while one was dissolved. The nominal capital of all the companies put together was Rs. 90,88,287.

The Bangalore Spectator states that a respectable Brahmin boy, fifteen years of age, a pupil at the Wesleyan Mission School, Bangalore, was induced by a Native convert of Miss Anstey's mission, Kolar, to accompany him there, to see some wonderful things. On arrival at Kolar the boy was taken to the house of recently-converted Brahmin, within the precincts of Miss Anstey's institution. The boy's head was shaved, and the Brahminical thread removed. The boy resisted, and cried so loud that the affair reached the ears of Mr. Chelviengar, assistant commissioner, who has taken criminal information against those concerned. Meantime the process of baptism was stopped; and the parents of the boy, having received a letter from him as to his treatment at the missionary institution, proceeded to Kolar and recovered possession of him.

Mr. Norton appeared on August 23rd before the full Bench, consisting of five Judges, in the High Court, in answer to a mandate of two Justices, to explain certain matters urged against bim by the Hon. Henry Sullivan, senior Member of Council. Mr. Norton was engaged as counsel for the defence of the Bodinaikanur zemindar, when he was charged at the Penultimate Sessions with abetting dacoity committed in Madura on Mr. Garstin, a member of the Board of Revenue. In conducting the defence, Mr. Norton made certain allegations which Mr. Sullivan asserts are defamatory. The question for the court's decision was, whether Mr. Norton had exceeded the latitude and privileges of counsel? Mr. Norton admitted the statements charged, and contended that he had made them under instructions, therefore he was not responsible for the truth or otherwise thereof. The Advocate-General and Mr. Spring-Branson appeared for Mr. Sullivan, instructed by the Government solicitor. After a long discussion the Court unanimously concurred with the Chief Justice, during the trial of the Bodinaikanur's case, that there was no evidence against Mr. Sullivan; but they are also of opinion that the rule must be discharged on the ground that Mr. Norton was protected in what he said by the privilege of counsel. They think this was a case for inquiry under section 10 of Letters Patent Amended. They promise to give a written judgment, s. ating their reasons fully.

BOMBAY.

VOLUNTEER W. U. NICHOLAS has been appointed a Lieut. in the Sind Volunteer Rifle Corps.

Mr. G. Druitt, Judge and Sessions Judge of Kanara, has been granted furlough on medical certificate for twelve months.

Mr. D. W. HERBERT will act as Executive Engineer, Begari Canals, during the absence of Mr. T. W. De Winton.

MR. J. MONTEITH, C.S., Under Secretary to Government, Revenue, Financial, and General Departments, has been allowed by the Secretary of State for India to return to duty within the period of his leave.

With reference to the memorial submitted by the Bombay Chamber of Commerce to Government on the question of the de'ay and increased expenditure of the High Court, the latter asked the members of the local bar, among other things, why one instead of two counsel should not be engaged in civil suits, and why their fee of four gold mohurs in a short cause be not reduced? At the meeting of the Bar recently held on the subject it was pointed cut that the rules under which counsel received their fees were framed by eminent members of the Bar, as Mr. Bayley, Mr. C. Anstey, Mr. Dunbar, Mr. Scoble, &c., and the meeting came to the conclusion that it saw no reason to interfere with the present rule regulating the fees. As regards the question of engagir g two counsel on each side, the meeting was of opinion that the principle was a fair one, which if not observed, would involve the postponement of suits for the convenience of the senior merbers of the Bar.

NORTH-WEST PROVINCES.

Colonel Conway Gordon, R.E., the manager of the North-West System of Railways, has submitted to Government a scheme for the formation of a Railway Service Corps for frontier service in case of emergency. Employés of every grade—drivers, guards, mechanics, platelayers, and pointsmen—on the vast railway system controlled by Government from Calcutta to Karachi will have the opportunity of voluntarily enrolling themselves in the corps. There will, therefore, be no lack of men, and as many Rifle Volunteers are in railway employ the corps on service would not be composed of helpless units. The details of the organisation are now being worked out.

The Pioneer says:—Another socio-military scandal which will not be longer kept quiet, is that which has convulsed the society of a minor but popular hill station in the Punjab. Of a totally different kind is this—an instance of the horseplay or rather the brutality that may have been once in vogue but that everyone hoped was entirely extinct. No more need be said than that the actors were on one side five officers of Her Majesty's service, and on the other a doctor of the same cloth; and that the play consisted of the former enticing the latter into a house, strapping him down, and ill-using and insulting him with a great deal of ingenuity. No suspicion of anything like a joke seems to redeem the affair, which will doubtless come in due course before the authorities, though it is possible that the offenders had drunk more than was good for them.

The details of the future administration of the Punjab Frontier Force, under the new conditions following its transfer from the local Government, are now being worked out at Army Headquarters, where Brigadier-General McQueen, Commanding the Punjab Frontier Force, has just arrived. The necessity of having an officer of the Quartermaster-General's Department attached to the Staff, which the Punjab Government had urgently pressed for, is fully recognised, and it is hoped that it may be found possible to transfer suc' an officer to the frontier from some district where he is not so much needed. There is much to be done in the way of intelligence work from Abbottabad to Rajanpur; and as the close-border system, under which officers could never venture to cross the frontier, is now thoroughly discredited, much valuable information regarding the country "over the hill" is likely to be obtained if the officers of the Force are allowed a judicious amount of liberty in their "sporting" trips. Their reports would be collected by the Assistant Quartermaster-General at Abbottabad, and we should not hear in future of the country a mile beyond our border being literally a terra incognita to all soldiers who have had to traverse it in visiting their homes among the independent tribes.

The Secretary of State for India has sanctioned the retention of Lieutenant-Colonel T. A. St. Quentin in India for four months in the Army Remount Department, without prejudice to his regimental appointment.

H.H. THE MAHARAJAH SCINDIAH has been pleased to give Mr. S. Mitter Rs. 2,000 towards defraying the costs of the English translation of the Mahabharata, being published by Babu Protapa Chunder Roy of Calcutta.

It is believed that instructions have been i sued that in future the official stay at Ooty is to be limited to the three hottest months in the year. The establishment to be taken up yearly by the various departments is to consist of one senior and one junior clerk and a copyist, as the business conducted at Ooty will be confined only to very urgent and important matters.

A MISTAKEN idea seems to prevail that the Viceroy will visit Gwalior in November. His Excellency is unable to do so, as the general plan of the tour has now been settled on the lines already made.

SEEING that much has been said in Bombay lately about the decadence of Indian cricket, it is pleasant to see, says the Pioneer, that the grumblers are likely to be put to confusion with a practical reply. It is now as good as settled that a cricket week is to be held about the middle of December at Allahabad, at which Bombay, Calcutta, and the North-West Provinces will meet in a a triangular duel. The arrangement appears an excellent one, for while it is difficult for Bombay to get together a representative team to go as far as Calcutta, and vice versa, it will be comparatively easy for each to get to Allahabad, with the attractions of a match against the North-West thrown in. This will be the biggest cricket event known in India for many years, and should help cricket generally by putting players on their mettle for the sake of being chosen for representative clevens. Possibly such a fixture may develop into a great annual match between North and South, or possibly—who knows—into such a contest as Gentlemen of India versus the Paisies.

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

UNITED.*

"United" is given to the public with every advantage which a work of such a nature can enjoy, for not only is Mrs. Sinnett the High Priestess of Clairvoyancy and Second-sight, but she is an authoress of considerable experience in the paths of psychic lore. Here, then, is a fine opportunity for the public to learn not only the theory of this occult science, but the way in which it adapts itself to the proceedings of daily life. As Mrs. Sinnett in producing a novel has, of course, full power to depict scenes and to describe persons in any way she chooses, it is not unfair to surmise that in "United" we have a faithful picture of the ways and doings of persons endowed with the preternatural gifts which the new School of Occultism claims to pessess. Let us see what Edith Kinseyle, the heroine of the tale, is launched into notice at the mature age of six, "prosecuting independent studies for horself in the library, removing volumes as she wanted them in the early hours of the morning to her own quarters, and leaving Mr. Kinseyle puzzled sometimes to think what could have become of some work of grave and serious import that he might wish to consult." Independence of studies was followed by independence of mind, and it is not surprising to learn that when the head of the establishment made certain arrangements for his child's education, she flatly refused to fall in with the plans. The possession of psychical gifts soon began to develop themselves, and when Miss Edith had barely reached her teens we find her sitting enveloped in a cloak on the stones at the gate of her father's home "looking out for the ghost." Nor was she disappointed, for on one eventful evening a "white knight" on hearthack encound to revert the girl's patience and perseverance horseback appeared to reward the girl's patience and perseverance in the ways of clairvoyancy.

But a crisis was at hand. It chanced that one eventful day,

But a crisis was at hand. It chanced that one eventful day, when on a visit to a neighbouring untenanted mansion which belonged to another branch of the Kinseyle family, the youthful secress fell into a trance, and felt as if she had been in Heaven. "The beautiful angel has been here just where I am standing, talking to me for I don't know how long, filling my mind with such rapture I can't describe it to you. I feel that still. I have been lifted up out of myself. I can't bear to come down again." She evidently needed friendly psychological consolation, and, of cours, it was forthcoming. It happened thus. A certain lady, Mrs. Malcolm by name, also possessed in a meek and humble way with occult powers, sitting in her chair one afternoon at Mrs. Malcolm by name, also possessed in a meek and humble way with occult powers, sitting in her chair one afternoon at dusk—for spirits do not love light—fell into a trance, during which she received commands to find out a young lady just budding into the glories of clairvoyancy. The injunction was by no means easy of accomplishment, as neither the name of the maiden was clearly indicated, nor was the locality honoured with her presence revealed, though it was added that it was probably in the British Islands. But the faithful matron accepted her charge and at or cases her brother to wander about England till charge, and at or ce set her brother to wander about England till he came to the spot where he would find the object of his search; and thus it chanced that, just as Edith Kinseyle was peoping for the first time into the unseen world, two gentlemen—one endowed with gifts like as herself— were peeping at her.

They met, and "a thrill of excitement" unnerved the youthful

They met, and "a thrill of excitement" unnerved the youthful believer in ghosts, but the feelings of surprise were rapidly supplanted by emotions of delight as the seer began to give his new pupil lessons in "visioury," and well she might be enchanted, for these are the tidings of great joy which he poured into the ears of the nervous, sensitive maiden who sat at his feet. "You evidently have gifts which mark you out as one of a select few on this earth. You will assuredly meet your proper companions as regards your higher spiritual life as time goes on. Be patient, meanwhile, and watchful, treasuring up your higher experiences meanwhile, and watchful, treasuring up your higher experiences and leading two lives for the moment, one outer and the other inner, but remembering that the inner is really by far the more important of the two." Thus spake Sydney Marston.

In due course Edith and Mrs. Malcolm met, and soon learned to appreciate one another, both having a "her" with whom to appreciate one another, both having a "her" with whom they could hold sweet converse when the pleasures of earth at any time palled. As, moreover, they met "by appointment with destiny," nothing was likely to 1un contrary to the current of true psychical love. But the powers of Edith were not yet fully developed. One day, however, Mrs. Malcolm proposed that her brother, who chanced to be present, should mesmerise the neophyte in the ways of the unseen world, and at once, mirabile dictu, she began to discourse to them of the dangers which stood in the way of hor mesmeriser's happiness. This was much, but when Sydney Marston appeared on the scene wonders upon wonders began to arise, till at length, whenever any particular information was needed, Edith Kinseyle was put into a trance, and, heigh presto! the "missing link" was at once supplied. At first she was herself unconscious during these periods of ecstacy, first she was herself unconscious during these periods of ecstacy, but as time drew on and she got more experienced in the ways of the "invisible," she acquired the habit of retaining her faculties while roaming in the regions of space in company with a spiritual "her." But she was undoubtedly honoured, for in her case there was also a "he," "her zephyr," as he is playfully called.

But space warns us to hurry on, and we pass over with a smile the scene where Sydney Marston "proposes" to his pupil—she being at the time in a trance; but, strangely enough, her "zephyr" said no. Fatal words, for it involved in the end the death of the rejected lover, whose spirit passed after a while into the frame of her whom he worshipped but never possessed, and he fell on the floor of his brougham a breathless corpse! Edith herself was more fortunate. She had her choice of remaining on earth a happy, handsome, envied bride; but she preferred the mansions of ghost-land, and betook herself to the regions of spirits, talking albeit at times with those she loved best on earth, of whom we fear the future spouse was not the foremost, for her spiritual existence seems to have been passed in company with "happy Sydney.'

What can be said of such a work? We are not of the number of those who hold to the opinion that peeps at the unseen world are permitted to poor mortal creatures; but were it otherwise, were it possible to imagine that for some hidden reason unknown to man the Ruler of the Universe at times thought proper to endow a solitary creature with solitary powers, were here and there a favoured child of earth to be raised to Heaven, and he decked in the garments of a divinity,—if all this be granted, is it conceivable, is it within the pale of belief, that the Almighty Deity would allow such stupendous gifts to be descrated by a use so personal, so earthly, so savouring of self, as is found in the pages of Mrs. Sinnett's novel? Is it not opposed, also, to all the teachings of religion, to all the dictates of experience, to all the promptings of the inner soul to hold the supposition that death can ever be a matter of choice, the date, the very hour being left to an individual's caprice? Yet this is the teaching of "United." If this volume be a fair reflex of psychology, the occult science must, we fear, stand condemned by all persons of common-sense, who refuse to depict the Creator of Heaven and earth as a petty, interfering, meddlesome Being, whose dealings with man do not soar above the level of school-girl romance, or the day-dreams of childish simplicity.

THOMAS GRANT, FIRST BISHOP OF SOUTHWARK.*

The life of a Bishop is not, in most cases, likely to abound in incidents which will enlist the interest of the "general reader;" and the biography of a Roman Catholic prelate, however well it may be written, would, as a rule, "fall flat." But Thomas Grant, the creator (s) far as our own century is concerned) of the Epis-copate of Southwark, lived and worked in times in which no less a stake than the welfare of the Roman Catholic Church in England was in question.

Our Anglican readers will have little difficulty in understanding. how greatly the Church of Rome in this country suffered from how greatly the Church of Rome in this country surered from being finally deprived, in Elizabeth's time, of local Episcopal authority, what a humiliation it was to it to be governed by bishops in partibus, and how great must have been the rejoicing of all the Roman Catholic community when, Lord John Russell'a furious "Durham letter" notwithstanding, their prelates were tacitly allowed to identify themselves, in name as well as in fact, with the dioceses which it was thenceforth to be their duty to administer.

of all the bishops then appointed, we may say (pace the manes of Cardinal Wiseman) that Dr. Grant seems to us to have been the most efficient. He had what may be profanely called a nasty job in organising such a diocese as that placed under his Episcopal charge: a job which might well have intimidated a strong man in possession of the blessing of robust health; yet Dr. Grant undertook the onerous duty, which suffering from one of the most agentiance complaints to which suffering from one of the most agonising complaints to which the human frame is subject; and nobly did he fulfil his task; leaving to his successor a comparatively organised and easily administered diocese. The Bishop's duty brought him much into contact with the Government; his good sense and bonhommie rendering him a persona gratissima at the War Office, where he was to all intents and purposes the representative par excellence of his Church, and whither questions connected with the employment at military hospitals of "religious," the appointment of chaplains, and similar matters, frequently called him. While ever anxious to secure every spiritual benefit for soldiers and sailors of his own belief, he was nevertheless man of the world enough to recognise the difficulties, partly derived from precedent, which often prevented the War Office from giving all he asked. He was, too, sufficiently reasonable to do full justice to the couratesy and "real kindness" with which he seems to have been uniformly met by the officials with whom he had to transact business, often rendered more irksome by the impracticability of the Irish ecclesiastics, which he denounced with due severity. "Questi Irlandesi," writes he to a friend, "are occasionally seccanti: they abuse the Government till they get something, and then they frustrate it if they can."

In his personal habits Bishop Grant practised an austerity amounting to what would, in most other men, have been asceticism; though he was far indeed from being an ascetic. For instance, he made a rule of confessing at least once daily, and, very early in life, "adopted the habit of keeping his eyes down." Regarding this the authoress tells a curious story of an eccentric lady who promised the Bishop £50 if he would but look at her. This he duly did, handing the money to an orphanage. Not that his strictness of life in any way diminished his unaffected cheerfulness; on which quality, both in himself and in others, he laid the greatest stress.

Melancholy, according to him, was "old Nick's best friend."

Cheerfulness, he declared, was the safest and surest weapon a soul can wield against the Devil. "Laugh at him, he would say. Nothing makes him savage like that. He soon leaves a soul alone that meets him with a good hearty laugh. Cheerfulness is the death of temptation."

He seems to have been "excellent company," and many good anecdotes are told of his ready and appropriate replies. One in particular is worth reproducing. One evening when several foreigners were present, one of them, alluding to the (unhappily unquestionable) fact that Englishmen speak "French worse than any of the Continental nations," asked Dr. Grant if he could account for it.

than any of the Continental nations," asked Dr. Grant if ne could account for it. He instantly replied that it was due to "their never having had an army of occupation in England to give them the proper accent."

Nor should the Bishop's kindness of heart be left without notice. Fancy a really affairê man playing double dummy for hours together with an old invalid whose grande passion was whist! This is, indeed, but one among many little acts of self-sacrifice and self-mortification which the book narrates; but it is one which everybody will be able to appreciate, and an infliction is one which everybody will be able to appreciate, and an infliction more irksome to an active mind can scarcely be conceived.

Miss O'Meara has written an exceedingly interesting life of a man profoundly good, and one who, possessing all the elements of a great, as well as of a good, character, was, humanly speak-ing, qualified to shine in a much larger sphere than that which he so well filled.

THE NORTH INDIA TUNE-BOOK.*

A musical compilation which, we believe, has long been a great desideratum for the Native Christian community in Northern India, has recently made its appearance in London. The authoress is the wife of the Rev. J. D. Bate, of the Baptist Mission and Allahabad, well-known, especially in India, by several learned and valuable contributions to Oriental literature, such as his admirable "Hindee Dictionary" and an "Examination of the Claims of Ishmael as viewed by Muhammadans," &c. The work just brought out by Mrs. Bate ("The North India Tune-Book") must be the result of long preparation and congenial labour in India, though we believe the final strokes have been put to it during a recent short visit, on account of health, to London, where it has been printed; and very creditably has the printer done his work. work.

In her Introduction Mrs. Bate gives us eight pages of informa-tion, not only as to the origin and objects of the present compi-lation, but on the subject of Indian music generally, ancient and modern, which will be read with interest by young Christians looking forward to or just commencing mission or zenana work in India—and much of which may be new even to old Indians.

There can be no doubt that this tune and hymn-book will be refer can be no doubt that this tune and hymn-book will be welcomed with avidity by the missionaries and their Native Christian flocks in Northern India, and, if only for the airs, in other parts of India too. But in this country also it should find its way into many old Indian families, and even when the words are but partially understood, the tunes might be sung (for their own sakes) either to Native or to English hymns. In mission and other Christian households in India, of course it will be a favourite work, supplying a want which has long been felt.

THE LITERARY MANUAL; OR, A COMPLETE GUIDE TO AUTHORSHIP.+

To those who are anxious to experience the pains and pleasures To those who are anxious to experience the pains and pleasures of authorship, or to those of lesser ambition, who desire merely the precarious wages of journalism, this little book will be welcome and useful. There has been a considerable demand for it, and as "the multitude of gentlemen who write" is, sad to say, hourly increasing, the demand will probably be still larger. It does not profess to make its readers successful novelists, poets, or agree editors: its aim is more moderably the less worthy. even editors; its aim is more modest, but not the less worthy. Remarking that "literature has no manual of practical literary technics, no complete and trustworthy guide which would enable an inexperienced writer to give his work that technical form and finish which commands from publishers, readers, and editors an attentive consideration," Mr. Percy Russell states that his object is simply "to supply a manual that shall leave no technical or business point in the literary life unexplained or obscure, and that shall fully equip the author for the work to be done in the most effective manner." The first part of the book gives a considerable deal of information and many useful hints to young writers anxious to mount "the steep where Fame's proud Temple shines afar;" the concluding portion of the manual deals with the more prosaic and practical work in where rame's proud Temple shines atar;" the concluding portion of the manual deals with the more prosaic and practical work in journalism. The duties, responsibilities, rights (and wrongs) of editors, sub-editors, and reporters are fully and clearly explained, and in a chapter on "Newspaper Proprietors," information is given as to "what journalists have to contend with." But it is to be hoped that the "striking example" therein referred to of the editor who was forced to decline some extraordinary correspondence offered him from Central Asia because his rich proprietor dreaded the effect of publication on certain stock in which prictor dreaded the effect of publication on certain stock in which he, was interested is a rare one. Wise proprietors leave their editors alone except perhaps when run in for libel. Mr. Russell does not, however, forget to tell the young journalist "how to avoid libel." The manual is evidently the work of an experienced hand which in paring reliable hints now come some valuable. enced hand, which in penning valuable hints pens some valuable warnings too. If its perusal helps to make a successful author or journalist, or serves to check the aspirations of some foolish folks who think that the paths of literature and journalism are surely paths of pleasantness and certain pay, it will in either case do good.

A WARNING.

TO THE EDITOR.

SIR,—I hope that you will warn the people of England against permitting butter merchants in India to mix cows' fat with ghee.

ghee.

Ghee is the form of butter universally used in Upper India by those who can afford to pay for it. Large quantities are exported from the Delhi division, and sent as far as Calcutta, 900 miles distant: the cows of Hausi-Hissar are famous.

The Calcutta Local Government has just decided that it cannot prosecute the merchants who adulterate this ghee with cows' fat; but it must be remembered that if once the Hindoos get into their heads the idea that we tasilly promit the sail deliges of the heads the idea that we tacitly permit the evil doings of the merchants, they will not only lynch the latter, but will create riots against Her Majesty's Imperial Government.

The Hiudoos worship the cow. The lessons taught us by the

A RESCLUTION by the Government of India on the petroleum explorations in Beluchistan states that the preliminary stages of the petroleum explorations in Beluchistan have now been brought to a close. The borings have satisfactorily established the existence of petroleum in such quantities as to warrant amply the prosecution of the operations on a large scale, the oil executed in the most suitable locality that may be found on further and closer investigation. A considerable quantity of the oil already pumped, having been sent to Sibi for trial in locomotives, has proved to be a most valuable fuel, the experiments conducted with two engines having terminated most satisfactorily. These results fully justify the continuance of operations on an extended scale. The present temporary establishment will consequently be broken up, and Mr. R. A. Townsend will proceed to Europe and America with the view of making the arrangements for the purchase of the necessary machinery and its delivery at Kurrachee at the commencement of the coming cold season, when operations will be resumed under his management. His Excellency the Governor-General of India in Council is desirous of taking this Governor-General of India in Council is desirous of taking this opportunity to place on record his appreciation of the fortitude, devotion, perseverance, and ability which have been displayed, under most trying circumstances and vicissitudes of climate, by Mr. R. A. Townsend and the staff employed under his orders on this duty. The operations were commenced during the cold season of 1884 85, and have since been prosecuted with only a brief intermission necessitated by intense heat, want of water, and the serious illness of most of the staff. Last summer, Mr. Coleman, one of the four European assistants, unfortunately died while being carried in dangerously ill from Katan to Sibi, and Mr. Townsend himself was prostrated by most serious illness, the Mr. Townsend himself was prostrated by most serious illness, the remainder suffering in a less degree.

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 11, 1886.

THE PRESS AND THE CURRENCY COM-MISSION.

THE appointment of a Royal Commission to inquire into "the recent changes in the relative values of the precious metals, shown by the decrease in the gold price of silver," has met with the approval of the English Press with one illustrious exception. The Standard has taken fright that an attempt will be made to tamper with the currency of the country, and it sees nothing in the complaint of India regarding the depreciation of the rupee but a "childish demand" for redress of a wrong with which England has no concern. The publication in the form of a Blue-Book of the correspondence between the British and Indian Governments respecting the Silver Question has furnished our contemporary with a text on which to deliver a homily on the extravagance of the complainant, and the just punishment which extravagance brings about. "There is nothing in this correspondence," so runs the sermon, "to indicate that there are any financial disorders in England at all. Not a hint appears that anything is in the least degree wrong with our currency or is likely to be. The man would be daring who dreamt of impunging it." And then follows the fear that the English sovereign which has become the great standard coin in international exchange, the measure by which the currencies of other nations are tested and valued, is to be meddled with, and its position in the money world disturbed by this Royal Commission:-

Men's minds are to be upset by false ideas, false ideas are to be aired, nostrum-mongers and currency maniacs are to be countenaired, nostrum-mongers and currency maniaes are to be considered, and a great, a world-embracing coinage put in the crucible. Why? Because something is wrong with it? No, but because the Government of India finds itself unable conveniently to pay all that it owes us—is, in other words, very hard up. "Great all that it owes us—is, in other words, very hard up. "Great difficulties will arise," the situation "will become intolerable," frontier and relief railways must be built," "taxes cannot conveniently be increased," "impossible to make both ends meet"and so on. These phrases give the essence of some of the more urgent pleas set forth by the Governor-General of India in Council, and re-echoed by the Secretary of State and Council here, as a justification for the English Government to "do something."

The suggestion on the above is that nothing should be done. India has only India to blame for the difficulties and troubles complained of, for " having imprudently contracted heavy permanent liabilities to England payable in gold," it is not to be wondered at that she should "find the weight of their liabilities enormously increased by the reduced market value of silver." Therefore, says the Standard, the Government of India "clamours" for relief. What it says practically is, "Never mind the market price of silver. Take it from us at its old price of 5s. per ounce, and we shall get on swimmingly, because the metal will then no longer compete with our drafts." This is an ingenious way of misrepresenting what the Government of India did say, and which is plain enough in the correspondence. The Royal Commission was not asked for "to gratify this childish demand," as the Standard puts it, but to find some way of relieving the difficulty which, pressing upon India, must sooner or later react upon England. "As no such way is practical," says the Standard, "we may keep our minds easy about the mischief it (the Royal Commission) can do to us." This is poor consolation for India, but it is candid enough, and it must be confessed like that offered by other journals who approve of the Commission. The Daily Telegraph offers its respectful sympathy to those who are suffering from the fall in the

It owns that "a large amount of individual embarrassment has been caused to men who are serving the Queen in our Eastern dominions," for "an Englishman serving in India is obliged, as a rule, to remit money home to support his children educated in England, and he loses seriously by the rate of exchange." But, although a Royal Commission is approved of, the Telegraph thinks that the depreciation of the rupee, and the fall in the value of silver, "will probably find a partial remedy from the free cperation of natural causes long before the Royal Commission can conclude its inquiries." In other words, the sufferers are told to wait upon Providence—a very ancient and excellent advice, but not always a profitable one in a pecuniary sense. Another morning contemporary, recognising the difficulties of the Indian Government and the "sufferings" of its civil and military servants who have to make remittances to England for the support of their families, thinks it "imperative that some full inquiry should be made into the silver question," but having given expression to this opinion lit concludes with the consolatory remark, "We fear the result will be comparatively trifling!" So do we. We have little faith in Royal or other Commissions appointed to inquire into complex questions upon which there are endless differences of opinion. We doubt whether any common understanding between the nations could devise a plan to arrest the decline in the value of silver without in some way interfering with legitimate trade all over the world. Sad as it may seem, there appears to be no help for it but patience. But this does not mean that no help can be devised for the civil and military servants of the Crown who are paid in rupees. They must look to the Government for relief which will be only justice. A Royal Commission will do nothing for them. It is the cup of Tantalus.

A REVISION of the Artillery commands in Burma has been sanctioned. The command of the whole of the Artillery in Burma will be a Class A Command; the Artillery in Lower Burma a Class C Command; an additional Lieutenant-Colonel and an Adjutant being allowed so long as the troops are considered to be on active service.

THE Government of India has decided to remove a battery of Artillery from Campbellmore to Rawul Pindee, to make room for as an escort for the two batteries remaining there. The Infantry detachment will be furnished from one of the regiments at Rawul Pindee; both movements will be carried out after the MAJOR B. E. Gowan, second in command of the Fourth Sikhs, Punjab Frontier Force, will probably get the command of the 26th Punjab Infantry in Burma. He is said to be a first-rate frontier officer, but had not the good fortune to serve in Afghanistan during the war, as his regiment was employed in keeping the Tonk border quiet. On one particular occasion, while so engaged, he behaved with great gallantry in attacking and defeating with heavy loss a force of Powindahs who had gathered for a raid on British territory.

Consequent on additional troops being sent to Burma for the cold season, three new Brigade Commands have been sanctioned. The following will be the Brigadiers and Staff: Cavalry Brigade; Brigadier-General Stewart, Q.M.G., Madras Army. The Bombay Gazette says:—It would seem that the time is ripe for effecting certain changes in the district and brigade commands in Upper India and so redistributing the Staff as to facilitate more rapid mobilisation than is at present possible. A glance at the Bengal Army List will show that some change is now called for. At Ferozepore and Jullundur, which are only 3rd class "station commands," there are now, consequent upon the raising of the 16th and 17th Bengal Cavalry, troops equal in numerical strength to a brigade. Thus at Ferozepore there are two batteries of artillery, a British infantry regiment, and a two batteries of artillery, a British infantry regiment, and a regiment of native cavalry and native infantry. At Jullundur the strength is similar, with the exception of there being only one battery. As compared with these stations, we found 2nd class brigade commands at Sialkot, Mooltan, and Agra. There are many troops at Ferozopore or Jullundur as at any of these stations, and it would seem desirable to strike a balance in the character of the commands. This could be done without extra cost, for if the Rohilkund and Saugor District commands be taken in we find five brigades costing Rs. 6,400 per mensem. These could be recast into 1st class commands, and Ferozepore and Tallandar priced also that status thus significant second less than the second less than Jullundur raised also to that status, thus giving seven 1st class station commands to colonels on the staff at Rs. 800 each or Rs. 5,600 in all. We do not know how far the changes will extend; but with the possibility of more Sikh regimen's being raised as soon as financial considerations permit, it is obvious that some modifications must be made in the distribution of the commands and the staff.

THERE will, during the next few months, says the Pioneer, be a great "run" in pronotion among the seniors of the Royal (Indian) Engineers. Major-General Mullius retires immediately, (Indian) Engineers. Major-General Mullius retires immediately, and thus gives a step to Colonel H. A. Brownlow, Inspector General of Irrigation, whose post will shortly fall vacant. General Hutchinson will be placed on the retired list next month after five years' unemployed service; but as there are already three Lieutenant-Generals (being one in excess of establishment), Lieutenant-General Fraser may be promoted General, and the lower step be absorbed. General Fraser will himself be placed on the retired list next Webrary after five years' unemployed. on the retired list next l'ebruary after five years' unemployed service; and, as Lieutenant-General Merriman prefers £1,000 a service; and, as Lieutenant-General Merriman prefers £1,000 a vear pension to waiting on £1 12s. 6d. per day for his Colonel's allowance, General Fraser's retirement will promote Lieutenant-General Sir Harry Prendergast to full General, thus putting him, with less than thirty-three years' service, over the heads of some 30 Lieutenant-Generals in the Army. These two steps will promote Major-General W. W. Goodfellow to Lieutenant-General, and he will have to vacate his appointment as Scoretary to the Bombay P.W.D., which vacancy may go to Colonel John LeMesurier. Among the Colonels, Colonel Shaw Stewart, Secretary to the Madras P.W.D., vacates his appointment on the 9th proximo under the 55 years' rule, and retires from the service; his successor may be Colonel Hastead, Chief Engineer for Irrigation in Madras. Colonel W. S. Trevor, V.C., vacates his appointment as Secretary to the Government of India in the Public Works Department next February after five years' tenure; and, as we recently stated, Colonel F. S. Stanton, Director-General of Railways, goes on furlough in December, his post falling vacant on the same date as Colonel Traver's. Thus there will be some his please to he falled furlough in December, his post falling vacant on the same date as Colonel Trevor's. Thus there will be some big places to be filled up before next spring.

NATIVE PRESS.

HINDOO SOCIAL REFORM. - The Jame-Jamshed says that it has been stated that the Hindoo community are shortly going to conbeen stated that the Hindoo community are shortly going to convene a public meeting by way of protesting against the movement of preventing infant marriages among their community by a legislative enactment. This news is scareely surprising. It is highly objectionable to ask Government to put their finger in the social pie. Every one is willing to see the practice of infant marriages and enforced widowhood abolished from among a community, but nobody was better suited to remove the evil than the community which suffered from it. The paper has long since been protesting against the inordinate zeal of some of these ardent reformers. Such an evil should be allowed to die its natural death under the ever-growing influence of education and civilisation, whereas an unnatural death sought to be caused by the intervention of Government would lead to an unnecessary the intervention of Government would lead to an unnecessary panic in the community. It cannot be that the Government would ever think of passing such an enactment in the face of such a strong current of opposition in the community, and it will, therefore, be a waste of time and energy on the part of those who wish to effect the reform to continue to clamour and ask Government to interfere in the matter. The best means of introducing the reform was to constantly agitate the subject in the public Press and by means of public lectures.

THE Prajabandhu would appear to rather desire a Russian occupation of India, and the following utterance is peculiar even in these days of peculiarities in the Native Press. The paper says:—"If Russ'a takes possession of India, the English will suffer. But what harm will be done in India? The English will suffer. But what harm will be done in India? suffer. But what harm will be done in India? The English have given India peace, established railways, telegraphs, roads, courts of justice, and post-offices. They have created in this country what did not before exist. We fell down, and we shall never forget that the English raised us up. But if the Russians assume the sovereignty of this country, we are not likely to suffer. Rather we may expect to gain. Then the worthy sons of India will get suitable appointments. The Russians are not so avaricious as the English are. The railways, telegraphs, and post-offices will not be destroyed. So, on the whole, we don't think that on the occupation of India by the Russians the people of India will suffer so much as England, except that there may be a short period of anarchy."

Miscellaneous.

The Calcutta papers are evidently alarmed at the possibility of that town being abandoned by the Government of India in favour of some more salubrious capital, and unburden themselves of a good deal of hysterical nonsense on the subject. The Indian Daily News seems to be especially distressed at the prospect of Simla being recognised as the official capital of India. It declines, until it has it on more assured authority, to believe that the Finance Committee could have made any such recommendation, and devotes the greater portion of a column to saying so. "Such recommendation," it says, "would stand, on the face of them, discredited and condemned. It would be rather the more sensible plan to let the Viceroy and his Council, like the Secretary of Seate and his Council, live and work in London, and send them out occasionally in the cold season as the globetrotters come. They would be quite as much en evidence, and of as much real use, there as at Simla; while if located in London they would at least have no claim to salaries calculated on the Indian scale."

The Pioneer is not altogether satisfied with the manner in which the Hon. F. Ferbes-Adam dealt with the silver question in his address to the shareholders of the Bank of Bombay, and points out that while he did not so much as mention the ominous fact of the recent arrival of considerable consignments of Australian silver in the London market, he did refer to the "series of papers" on the subject of silver issued by the Finance Department. The Pioneer adds:—"If after ten long years' experience he or we, or anyone else, still believe that the authorities in England are to be moved by 'less publicity,' and that the authorities in India should be content to wait till the subject was submitted to the research of a commission,' we can only remind them of the experience of that classic rustic who took up his post on the banks of a river, and was content, before crossing, to wait till the stream had run by. No publicity, no commission: that, we take it, will be pretty generally admitted. Meanwhile will Mr. Forbes-Adam inform us why the rupee fell in 1870 from 1s. 9J. to 1s. 6d., and in 1885 again from 1s. 7d. to 1s. 6d., albeit at either time the Government here was as silent and discreet on the subject of silver as even Mr. Forbes Adam, or even Sir William Vernon Harcourt himself could have desired?"

Colonel Lockhart had many strange experiences during his adventurous journey in the regions about the Hindu Kush; and when the story of these comes to be told it will be seen how severely the endurance and courage of the members of the mission and their escort were tested. His ride from Chitral to India was in itself one of the "best on record," and showed how quickly the worst country can be traversed by a travelier bent on reaching his journey's end, and above all petty considerations of personal comfort and ease. Colonel Lockhart left Mastuj in Chitral on July 7th, and reached Murree on the 24th of the same month. The distance covered was 520 miles, the average for each day being just over thirty miles. Four high passes (Chamarkand, Hatupir, Kamri, and Traghal), some under snow, were crossed; and many swollen streams forded or passed over by means of rope-bridges, the ponies swimming across as best they could. Colonel Lockhart rode one pony the whole distance from Mastuj to Gilgit; thence onwards he had to trust to chance ponies being picked up at villages on the route; when these were not available a stage had to be done on foot. Three and sometimes four ordinary marches were done in a day; the only shelter at night was a blanket stuck up as a tente d'abri; while the only food was such as the villagers could rurnish. Some of the wildest and most inhospitable country in Central Asia was passed through, the traveller's only companions being a Kashmiri and a Chitrali servant. One has come to regard Chitral as a place so far distant that it can only be spoken of in a vague kind of way—even Gilgit is "out of the world;" and yet our latest explorer took but seventeen days to cover the distance from Mastuj to Murree. The petty Khanates which lie under the shadow of the Rindu Kush cannot be so far removed from our political influence after all.

The prospectus of the Bengal Presidency Rifle Association has just been issued, together with the programme of matches to be shot off next December. The Viceroy and the Duke of Connaught are the patrons; the Commander-in-Chief is the president; while in the list of vice-presidents are the three Lieutenant-Governors and a number of Native noblemen. The council comprises the members who served on the Northern India Rifle Association; and Captain Chanter, of the Simla Volunteers, is the secretary. For the benefit of intending competitors in the matches, we may state that the new Association medals will have on the obverse the device of a royal tiger with "N. I. R. A., 1861-86," and on the reverse a laurel wreath with the words, "Bengal Presidency Rifle Association," thus showing the connection between the old and the new associations. There will be thirty-three matches in all, and very liberal prizes are offered, the total value being several thousand rupees. The entrance fees are made very low indeed in order that non-commissioned officers and soldiers both in British and Native regiments may be encouraged to enter; and it is believed that a very large number of competitors will come forward, and that a marked impetus will thus be given to the acquirement of marksmanship in the Indian Army.

THERE will, the Pioneer understands, be no English official on the Council of Regency which is to conduct the administration of the Gwalior State, the arrangement being similar to that which obtained during the late Maharajah's minority in 1884. This will best be understood by a reference to article 8 of the Treaty of that year, which contains the following clause: "It is further provided that during such minority the persons entrusted with the administration of the government shall act upon the advice of the British Resident in all matters whereon such advice shall be offered, and no change shall be made in the persons entrusted with the administration without the consent of the British Resident acting under the orders of the Governor-General." This arrangement ensures a check upon mal-administration and intrigue, at the same time that interference in the State affairs is reduced to a minimum.

THE MADRAS SEPOY.—The Madras sepoy, who has been pretty loudly condemned of late in Burma, was well spoken of in all previous wars. Even of late years in Afghanistan he rendered good service, and during the Mutiny of 1857 proved not only that he was faithful, but possessed good fighting qualities. Has the new organisation anything to do with present complaints of his deterioration? In the second Burmese war Madras regiments had usually in addition to a commanding officer, a major, six captains, ten lieutenants and six ensigns. Although possibly all these may not have generally been present with the corps, every regiment on foreign service had usually fifteen or sixteen British officers, from the commanding officer who had been perhaps a quarter of a century with it, a major and down to the lads recently joined from England. All looked upon the regiment as their home, knew and respected their men, and wereobeyed, feared and loved by the sepoys. All this is changed now. A regiment is officered from the Staff Corps, and may possibly go into action with British officers who have not been a year with the men. There are now usually only seven or eight officers with a sepoy regiment, compared with sixteen or eighteen thirty years ago. The sepoys usually followed where they were led, in the old days; and complaints such as have frequently been heard since the fall of Minhla were almost unknown, in the previous Burmese wars.

E. B. Sladen has been created a Baronet is an event which has for many months past been anticipated; and the only matter for surprise is that the honour was not conferred upon him at the close of the Burma Expedition. No officer in Her Majestys service had greater claim upon the Government for reward; not for his services with the Burma Expedition alone, but for others rendered during a long and honourable connection with that country. When the recent expedition was decided upon, Colonel Sladen was at once sent for and appointed Chief Political Officer, and the prominent part he took on the occasion of the capture of King Theebaw must ever stand prominently forward in the history of our army. Colonel Sladen was in the Burmese war of 1852-53, and at the relief of Pegu, for which he received the medal with clasp. He was engaged in the expeditions against the rebel hill tribes of the Yoonzalic district, Martaban provinces, 1856-57, where he was dangerously wounded; and for his services there he received the thanks of the Supreme Government. In 1858 Colonel Sladen was in the Indian Mutiny, and was present at the capture of Lucknow, capture of Sultanpore, passage of Goomtee affair, and capture of guns at Davvadpore, for which he received the medal and clasp. Colonel Sladen obtained his first commission on 14th April, 1849, was appointed to the Madras Staff Corps on 18th February 1861; was appointed to the Madras Staff Corps on 18th February 1861; was appointed to the Madras Staff Corps on 18th February 1861; was appointed to the Madras Staff Corps on 18th February 1861; was appointed to the Madras Staff Corps on 18th February 1861; was appointed to the Madras Staff Corps on 18th February 1861; was appointed to the Madras Staff Corps on 18th February 1861; was appointed Lieutenant-Colonel on 14th April, 1875, and ceased to be employed on 1st April of the present year, when he proceeded to Europe under the provisions of G.O.G. 296 of 1883. On the occasion of the occuption of Mandalay, on 2nd December 1sst, Colonel Sla

The report of the trade and navigation of Burma for 1885-6 covers a year of war and disturbance and of commercial and political uncertainty. Yet the tokens of these adverse conditions, though they are to be seen on many pages in the report, seem in no case to be serious. Notwithstanding the troubles of the year there was an increase of nearly eleven per cent. in the trade of the province over the previous year. The private trade in merchandise with foreign countries shows an increase of more than thirteen and-a-half per cent, the more satisfactory item in the import trade being cotton goods, in which there was an increase of nearly twenty-six lakhs of rupees value. In the exports the increase was over twenty-eight per cent, mainly in rice, which, at an aggregate value of about five crores and a-half, exceeded the previous year's export by over a crore and a-half. As an indication of "the disturbed state of the country," the reporter points

t) the 360 guns and 205 revolvers imported in 1000-0 as against 331 guns and 97 revolvers in the previous year. But the gunpowder imports appear also to have fallen off, an incident which thereporters ay scalls for no comment, not finding in it, we may supto the 360 guns and 205 revolvers imported in 1885-6 as against pose, another indication of the disturbed state of the country. The failures at Rangoon at the beginning of last year have left their mark upon the hardware trade, the overstocking of 1884 having been followed by an import of these goods smaller than any on record for many years. The report throws its little ray of light upon the drink question by vouchsafing the information that "whiskey is taking the place of the superior brands of brandy, and most of the latter spirit now passed into consumption is imported in cask, is of inferior quality, and is sold at very low prices." If the prosperity of a community is in ratio with the quantity of champagne that it drinks, Burma must have felt the res angusta domi in late years, for while in 1882-3 the country imported over four thousand gallons of champagne the imports of that sparkling beverage last year came to only 1,765 gallons. But we must not make too much of this as an indication of the commercial condition of Burma. It is of more importance to note that there was a large increase in the value of the machinery and millwork imported, in the tonnage of shipping in Burmese ports. As a matter of local interest, and as a proof of the increasing measure in which India is supplying the East with textile manufactures, it is worth noting that during the last eight years the local consumption of twist and yarn manufactured in Indian mills have increased 62:39 per cent., while the imports from all sources of the foreign-made article have gone down from 5,319,481lbs. in 1878-79 to 4,425,494lbs in 1885-86, or 16:21 per cent. The teak exports to Bombay for the year amounted to over 66,000 tons, twice as much as five years ago, Bombay taking just half the exports of this commodity.

SILENCE IS-GOLDEN (?)

(At the last annual meeting of the Bank of Bombay, the Chairman, Mr. Forbes-Adam, spoke as follows:—"The Finance Department have lately seen fit to issue a series of papers which must have gone far to discredit silver and weaken the disposition of holders in Europe. For a week or two silver has led the decline, whereas it previously followed on exchange. For my part, I think the Government of India would have acted more prudently had they, in endeavouring to influence the opinions of the Home authorities, given less publicity to their arguments and been authorities, given less publicity to their arguments, and been content to wait till the subject was submitted to the research of a Commission.")

A DICTIONARY OF ISLAM.

Being a Cyclopædia of the Doctrines, Rites. Cleremonies, and Customs, together with the Technical and Theological Terms, of the Muhammadan Religion.

BY

THOMAS PATRICK HUGHES, B.D. M.R.A.S.

Fellow of the Punjab University, Missionary of the Church Missionary Society, Peshawur, Afghanistan.

"We have at last obtained a real encyclopædia of the Mul ummadan Religion, and we can only hope that the sterling value of the result of so much labour and study will receive its well-merited recognition."—Literary Wo.ld.

"An excellent service has been rendered by Mr. Hughes in compiling this Dictionary of Islam to all those who have dealings with Moslems, Islam, or the literature of the Arabs; and the volume before us, as the work of one man, is a murvel of industry, and fairly to be characterised as a cyclopedia of the doctrines, rites, ceremonies, and customs; together with the technical and theological terms of the Muhammedan religion."—Saturday Review.

"Mr. Hughes' competency for his task can fully be judged only by those as familiar with Muhammadanism as he is himself. He indicates great care and sound judgment. . . . We have read many of its articles with great interest."—British Quarterly Review.

"The work is unique of its kind, and invaluable to all who live in, or love the East."—Daily Telegraph.

"In the 750 pages of his present work he gives an exact explanation of every term, action, and idea of the Mussalman faith, the information being in every case taken from the most esteemed Muhammadan sources, with the comments of the best European scholars.

This most useful work will be of undoubted value to estudent of comparative religion."—Homeward Mail.

"VOICE OF INDIA."

TO THE PUBLIC OPINION OF THE PROPLE OF INDIA.

THERE are in England large classes willing and anxious to do justice to India, but they find it very difficult to know how to act. They complain that Indian questions are intricate; that the opinions of official experts are contradictory; and that the people of India are dumb, and do not give expression to their needs. This defect is now remedied by publishing MONTHLY (in Bombay) a magazine somewhat similar in nature to Public Opinion in England, which provides a compendium of all that is most valuable in the native journals throughout India on the leading topics of the day. The Voice of India thus gives forth a clear sound, interpreting between the rulers and the ruled, and making known the true wishes and feelings of the Indian people.

ing between the rulers and the ruled, and making known the true wishes and feelings of the Indian beople.

The Magazine advocates no views of its own. It seeks only to reflect with care and accuracy the views set forth in the native press. The Indian people are naturally docile and conservative; and it will be seen that the writings thus brought before the English public are characterised by a knowledge of facts, and generally by practical good sense and moderation. No doubt grievances are from time to time being set forth; but it is a policy of prudence, no less than of justice to give these grievances a fair constitutional hearing. Accordingly, it is hoped that this publication will be subscribed for by Members of Parliament and other public men desirous of dealing with Indian questions, and that the facts thus brought together in a convenient form will be of value to journalists and other public writers. It is specially desired to bring the Magazine before the public in Clubs, Reading-rooms, Libraries, and Institutes throughout England, with a view to promote a sustained and intelligent interest in the welfare of our Indian Empire, comprising as it does 220 millions of our fellow-subjects.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 20, 1886.

General Intelligence.

[BY OVERLAND MAIL.]

THE Overland Mail brings us letters and advices from Bombay to the 31st August; from Allahabad to the 29th August; and from Calcutta and Madras to the 28th August.

THE Viceroy leaves Simla on tour on the 30th of October.

THE Commander-in-Chief's cold weather tour embraces all the chief stations of North India.

THE question of the North-West Frontier defences is just now prominently to the fore at Simla, the Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab being in frequent conference with the military authorities for the settlement of various questions of importance.

A LONG correspondence has been published between the Bombay Government, the Bombay Chamber of Commerce, and the Bombay Bar, regarding the administration of civil justice in the Bombay High Court.

It is understood that Sir M. E. Grant Duff will probably remain in office until the arrival of his successor. According to previous arrangements he would have left India on the 19th October, while the Hon. Robert Bourke was not to have sailed from England until early in November. In this case Mr. Sullivan, as Senior Member of Council, would, by the provisions of the Charter Act, have officiated for some weeks as Governor of Madras—a scandal throwing all other Madras scandals into the shade.

THE order of the Secretary of State in the Crole case has been received by the Government of India. Mr. Crole is reinstated with loss of pay but not of service, and the Madras Government is centured for removing him.

MR CROLE has been appointed District and Sessions Judge, North Malabar.

THE authorities are considering the advisability of transferring the Forest Department from the control of the Home to that of the Revenue and Agriculture Department.

THE death-rate in Bengal jails last year was 59.2 per thousand against 49.7 in 1884.

The question of the transfer of the Forest Department from the control of the Home Department to that of the Revenue and Agricultural Department is now understood to be under the consideration of the authorities at Simla.

The net Indian sea and land customs revenue, exclusive of the salt revenue, for the first four months of the current financial year, amounted to Rs. 38,01,000, as compared with Rs. 37,54,000 during the corresponding period of last year.

The Judges of the High Court have written to the local Government stating that, in their opinion, the proposed abolition of the Small Causes Courts at Surat, Poona, and Ahmedabad should not be carried into effect.

THE Judges of the High Court have, on a petition presented to them by candidates for the Pleaders' examination, resolved to hold the examinations for High Court and District pleaders separately.

THE HON. MR. W. W. HUNTER leaves Bombay on the 14th of next month on two months' privilege leave to England. Though on leave, Mr. Hunter is practically going home on service, his business being to arrange about the publication of the five remaining volumes of the new edition of the Gazeteer. Three volumes will be brought out in November, and the last, including the Index, which will itself make some 300 pages, in February or March.

Sin Lepel Griffin, after leaving Gwalior, takes two mouths' leave from the end of the month to Simla.

In order to secure greater efficiency in the upper grades of the Police Department, the Government of India has approved of Assistant Superintendents of Police being put through a course of instruction in drill and military exercises.

POLICE officers will in future, therefore, when local governments so desire it, be attached for instruction under the orders of the officer commanding the station to any infantry regiment, British or Native, which may be located at the station in which they are serving.

A REPORT which is declared to be totally unfounded is being circulated to the effect that the Maharajah of Jodhpore has invited the editor of a Madras Native paper to fill the place of the late Mr. Hewson. As a matter of fact, the Maharajah has applied to Sir Edward Bradford to select an officer to succeed him in the State.

H.H. THE NIZAM has sanctioned the proposal to substitute Hindustani for Persian in all communications between the several departments of the Hyderabad Government

DURING the month of May 15,690,206 pounds of cotton, valued at Rs. 34,86,264, was exported from Bombay.

MR J. B. LYALL, British Resident, and Mr. Seshadri Iyer, Dewan of Mysore, lately paid a visit of inspection to the Kolar Gold Mines.

COLONEL WOODTHORPE and the other members of the Chitra Mission have reported their arrival at Srinagar, whence they are going to Simla.

THE MAHARAJA OF KASHMIR having decided to make a thorough land settlement within his territories, the Government of India have placed at his Highness's disposal the services of Mr. Andrew Wingate, C.I.E., of the Bombay Civil Service, who has for several years been engaged in settlement work in the Udaipur State. This selection has been made at the Maharaja's wish, and the settlement of the Kashmir land revenue cannot fail to be most popular among the people themselves, whose hard fate in the matter of heavy and arbitrary assessments has been only too long notorious.

JAM ALI, the rebellious son of the Jam of Lis Bayla, who was being followed by his father and Sir Oliver St. John through the country south of Quetta, has not been captured. He has decamped from Wad with Shakar Khan, the Chief who gave him asylum, and has made off to the Kharan desert, where pursuit is hopeless.

In spite of the extent of the inundations at Mandalay the loss of life has been small compared to what it might have been. It is thought that at the outside twenty-five persons have lost their lives. Nor has any widespread distress been caused, and the gratuitous relief offered by the Local Government has not yet been taken advantage of to any great extent.

According to a version of a story of Lieut. Macartuey's death that has reached an Allahabad paper from Burma, the mortal wound was inflicted not by the enemy, but accidentally by one of the men of the regiment whilst the brave officer was leading an attack on the rebels.

THE Menbo District is still very disturbed, and dacoit gangs are reported from the Nyingyan and Yemethen districts, though the situation there is better than previously stated. From Bhamo reports are generally satisfactory. The claimant of the Tsawbwaship of Momuk has surrendered, and is under detention at Katha. The troops at Tammu are healthier, cholera having entirely ceased. The 3rd Gurkhas have been halted at Pagan to reinforce the southern garrisons. Cholera has again broken out in this regiment.

Some disquieting rumours have been current regarding the survey party in Upper Burma under Captain Hobday's command. Captain Hobday was safe and well at Mandalay so late as the 20th inst.; his reported capture by facoits is therefore a myth.

News, dated last April, has been received of Mr. Carey from Lob Nor. His course from Leh was first of all southeastwards into Western Thibet and then due north to Khotan, whence he made the Tarim River. After an excursion northwards to the neighbourhood of the Baba Kul Lake, he returned to the Tarim River, and followed its course south-eastwards to Lob Nor. The next news of the traveller should come from Pekin, as he must have entered Northern China some weeks ago.

PRINCE ESTERHAZY has returned to Calcutta from his shooting trip in Eastern Bengal, having shot five tigers and one leopard in ten days.

The Bank of Bombay has reduced its rate for demand loans on the security of Government paper to seven percent. The Bank of Bengal rate—six percent.—remained unchanged.

Notes of the Week.

Madras has not, as many thought, centralised in itself all official scandals. Bombay is now agitated, and the agitation takes the shape of vehement editorials, letters, and paragraphs against its own Government and its own Chamber of Commerce. The latter having sent a memorial to the former complaining of "the excessive delay and expense attending the administration of civil justice in the Bombay High Court," the local Bench, Bar, and Press have taken up arms against what appears to be a veritable sea of trouble. It may be that it is not altogether within the functions of a Chamber of Commerce to instruct the Government on the qualification of Judges, and the professional etiquette to be observed by Barristers, but Chambers of Commerce and Trades Associations in India have for years past been allowed to take strange liberties, and have been encouraged rather than otherwise to go beyond the sphere of what might be thought their legitimate functions.

Bur whatever be the cause or the objection, the fact now remains that the Bumbay Chamber of Commerce has commented somewhat strongly on the Bench and Bar of Bombay, and the Bench and Bar of Bombay have replied not less strongly. The quarrel is not a very pretty one as it stands, and it is to be regretted that it has taken the form it has. Had there been a little more tact and a little less display of the cacaethes scribendi on all sides, the present scandal, for scandal it is, would not have occurred.

It is, of course, very easy to raise an outery that the independence of the Bench has been threatened, and the honour of the Bar called into question, because it is said that the Judges get too many holidays, and the Barristers too many refreshers; but if it be true that the former have 209 holidays in the year, and the latter have laid down rules for their own remuneration which operate very oppressively towards suitors, there would seem to be some grounds for the complaints urged. Even a Bombay paper which takes the side of the legal gentlemen confesses that "the volume of this stormy correspondence cannot conceal the fact that the Bar is made for the public, not the public for the Bar."

THE angry feelings which have been let loose in Madras concerning the personal squabbles and scandals in that Presidency do not seem to have been allayed by the publication of the Secretary of State's decision upon what is known as the Crole-Sullivan Case. The Pioncer is very strong upon the subject, but it must be remembered that that journal has all along been the staunch advocate upon one side of the question only. If our information be correct, there are (as is generally the case) "faults on both sides."

THE scare about the greased cartridges which helped to fan, if it did not give flame, to the Bengal Mutiny of 1857 cannot yet have been forgotten. It has been succeeded now by a scare concerning the adulteration of qhee, a matter upon which a correspondent who knows India well addressed a letter to this journal some weeks ago. The Hindus in lower Bengal appear to be greatly agitated about the reports regarding the adulteration which is said to be carried on by their own fellow-countrymen, but it is to be hoped that the prompt action which, according to the Times telegram this morning, has been taken by the local Government at Calcutta will have a reassuring effect, and that neither Hindus nor Mahommedans will accept the belief that the British Government in India will allow their favourite ghee to be adulterated with the fat of cow or pig. But this one incident shows how slender is the thread with which we still hold sway over the feelings of the excitable and superstitious Oriental.

To day is the anniversary of two events which can hardly yet be considered ancient history in England—the anniversary of the battle of the Alma and the anniversary of the capture of Delhi. The Mahommedan was our ally in the former, our foe in the latter. We hold Delhi now, and have lopes that we have won over the good feelings of the majority of the Mahommedans of India to our rule—but we have almost lost all hold on the Mahommedans of Turkey. It is believed at Constantinople that England can no longer be relied upon as the friend of the Sultan, and so a Russo-Turkish alliance is openly spoken of. It is even said that England will not object to see the Russians masters of Constantinople. And yet to prevent that "dream" of Sclavonic ambition, England this day thirty-two years ago sent the flower of her army to fight or die on the heights of the Alma. The question prompted at the English graves by that little river now is, "Have these dead died in vain?" And there is no answer to be given, but the silence of—shame!

The arrangement sanctioned in the matter of the Inspector-Generalship of Artillery in India involves some changes at army head-quarters. Hitherto the staff establishment has consisted of an Inspector-General with his staff officer, ranking as a Brigade-Major, and a Deputy Adjutant-General, R.A., with an Assistant. In future there will be the Inspector-General and an Assistant Adjutant-General only, the latter being a Lieutenant-Colonel on Rs. 600 staff pay. During the cold weather a staff officer will be attached to the Inspector-General to accompany him on tour in place of a permanent Brigade-Major. There is no reasonable doubt that the overgrown staff of the Artillery at head-quarters admitted of these rejuctions.

The Bombay Bar and the Government.—The question raised by the Chamber of Commerce about the barristers and their fees must not be allowed to drop. The beauties of British justice are almost nullified by the wasteful expenditure attending it. There may be a few instances on record of justice being perverted owing to pecuniary disability of the right party, but there are numbers of instances in which the litigants have given up half way their cases for want of means. Even the successful litigant has in some cases to rue the day when he went to seek the protection of the law. In addition to the "long bills" of the solicitors the "convenience of the barristers" has a good deal to do with this state of affairs. During the share mania of 1864-65, the work of the High Court vakeels increased to such an extent that the fee of Rs. 3 for serving a notice was enhanced to Rs. 20, and the notice servers demanded Rs. 5 in place of the usual fee of 8 annas. Of course the work of the barristers increased in similar proportion. Barristers were feed to attend joint stock companies' meetings, they were invited to act as liquidators to tottering concerns, while a small number were engaged in keeping their own heads above water on their own account. Under these unsatisfactory conditions the system of employing two barristers came into vogue. The same conditions do not exist now.—Kaisar-i-Hind.

LATEST INTELLIGENCE.

(BY TELEGRAPH.) (Times Correspondents.) INDIA.

CALCUTTA, SEPT. 12. The tenders for the loan of 120 lakhs which the Government is raising for the purpose of constructing docks at Calcutta and Bombay were opened on Friday. A sum amounting to over five times the required amount was tendered, and the loan was issued at an average rate of Rs. 97 11a., the minimum rate accepted being Rs. 97 8a., and the total amount to be received by the Government being Rs. 1,17,23,035. Although, for the first time, the practice was adopted of receiving tenders at Bombay as well as at Calcutta, nearly the whole amount appears to have been allotted at Calcutta. The result is considered very favourable, and a proof that, notwithstanding the silver difficulty, the credit of India still stands high.

The news of the appointment of a Currency Commission has been received with general satisfaction, and a hope is expressed on all sides that its labours may throw some light upon, and suggest a remedy for, the silver difficulty. The selection of members meets with universal approval, and especial gratification is felt that the direct representation of the Indian Government has been secured by the nomination of Mr. Barbour, secretary to the Indian Financial Department. For some days prior to Friday the Indian Financial Department. For some days prior to Friday, and apparently in consequence of the appointment of this Commission, there was a marked and steady improvement in the exchange, which rose by nearly a penny. On Friday a retrograde movement set in, however, and continued yesterday; but there is -an impression that this is only temporary, and that a further rise may be expected.

The Finance Committee is now engaged in holding a local inquiry at Bombay. The Chamber of Commerce of that city has published a letter which it addressed to the Committee last June making various proposals for the effecting of economies. making various proposals for the effecting of economies. It begins by calling attention to the enormous amount of superfluous work required from the officials in preparing utterly useless returns and statistics. It then describes the salaries of the Civil Service as extravagantly high, and suggests a revision of all salaries, particularly of those above Rs. 1,000 per mensem, and a larger employment of Natives. It advocates the substitution of Lieutenant-Governors for Governors in Madras and Bombay, and the abolition of the Executive Councils and Commanders in Chief of those Presidencies, pointing out that a large saving would thus be effected without any loss of efficiency. It protests would thus be effected without any loss of efficiency. It protests against the annual migrations of the Government to Mahableshwar and Poonah, and suggests that one of the Governor's two residencies at Bombay should be sold. It asserts that large reductions are possible in the High Court, the Mint, the Public Works, and other departments, and it strongly objects to the payment of £70,000 yearly to the Admiralty for the services of the six old obsolete ships on duty, which could be performed by the Indian Marine at half the cost.

A large meeting of various sections of the Hindoo community, was held at Bombay last Sunday for the purpose of protesting against any legislative interference with the custom of infant marriage, the Honourable Rao Sahib Vishnanarayan Mandlik presiding. The meeting seems to have been boisterous, and towards the end absolutely uproarious, as a number of reformers was a number of reformers. were present, and neither party was disposed to listen to the speakers of the opposite side. It was eventually resolved to adopt a memorial to the Viceroy stating that the Hindoos, with the exception of a small minority, had no sympathy with the agitation against the existing marriage customs, and were not prepared to invoke legislative interference with an institution which they still cherished as being of social and religious impor-tance. The result of the meeting, however, made it evident that a considerable section of the Hindoo community of Bombay was tance. in favour of reform.

Ludy Dufferin will preside at a meeting of the Indian Female Medical Aid Association, to be held at Simla on the 29th inst. In this connection it is announced that proposals for the award of the Queen's and Viceroy's medals have been accepted by almost all the Indian associations and colleges. The conditions will be published shortly. The flindoo high priest of Baidaynath has changed his gift of medals into two scholarships, to be held by high caste women. A general meeting of the association will be held at C loutta in January.

The Vicercy will leave Simla on the 28th of October for Bhawulpore, where he is to stay three days. He will then go to Lahore, and, after a visit of three or four days, will proceed by way of Baroda to Bombay and Poonah, arriving in Calcutta about the 14th of December.

The Begum of Bhopal has announced her intention of following the example of Holkar and Scindiah, by abolishing the transit duties through her territories from the 1st of October. All the important States of Central India have now adopted this enlightened policy

The Rajah of Sikkim has been informed that he has abrogated his treaty with India, by permitting Tibetan troops to enter his country. Meanwhile the Tibetans appear to continue in occupation of the eastern portion of Sikkim, and the Rajah is powerless to expel them.

The Indian trade and navigation returns for the first four

The Indian trade and navigation returns for the first four months of the financial year show the following results:—Imports, excluding Government stores and treasure, Rs. 18,62,08,883, against Rs. 16,24,45,250 in the corresponding section of last year, and Rs. 17,13,75,786 in 1884; exports Rs. 30,80,61,231, against Rs. 28,01,26,947 and Rs. 29,78,75,978 respectively; gross amount of import duty collected, Rs. 81,68,418, against Rs. 70,12,635 and Rs. 78,16.875; gross amount of export duty Rs. 22,23,781, against Rs. 24,22,651 and Rs. 19,34,117.

CALGUTTA, SEPT. 19.

The Madras Chamber of Commerce has addressed a letter to the Indian Government, suggesting as a remedy for the silver difficulty that an import duty should be imposed on gold. The Chamber says that India is herself largely responsible for that Chamber says that India is herself largely responsible for that very appreciation of gold which is causing heavy loss to the country. Although gold is not required for the purposes of the currency, yet India, during the decade ending 1883-84, imported that metal to the value of nearly £24,000,000, or about 10 per cent. of the total quantity of gold produced in the period. There is, the Chamber says, a tendency on the part of the Native capitalists to buy gold for the purpose of hoarding, which is likely to increase with the depreciation of silver. They see that gold is a good investment, having advanced steadily in value, while the purchasing power of silver is decreasing. Therefore they are promoted to convert silver into gold, and to await they are prompted to convert silver into gold, and to await events. The Chamber thinks that when once the people of India realise the fact that the future of silver is very uncertain, there may be a rush for gold in India difficult for the world to meet. If India only begins to absorb gold at the same rate as Egypt has been doing during the last seven years, £60,000 worth will be required to supply her annual wants. Gold is a luxury in India, and therefore an article which might be appropriately taxed, and the Chamber submits that India should not be encouraged in doing what has the effect of depreciating her currency and impoverishing her Government.

It would seem that the Government is already so far acting on this suggestion as to have instituted an inquiry, through the district officers, regarding the extent to which gold is taking the place of silver in the manufacture of native ornaments.

Mr. Barbour, Secretary of the Financial Department, will leave India in October to join the Currency Commission. He will be succeeded by Mr. Westland, as soon as the latter can be spared for the Finance Committee.

It is understood that the Indian Government has sent a long reply to the letter of the Treasury on the silver question. The despatch will doubtless be laid before the Commission as an authoritative exposition of the views of Lord Dufferin and his advisers

The Native community throughout Bengal has been greatly excited by the discovery that extensive adulteration is carried on in the manufacture of ghee, or clarified butter, an article in daily use in every native household. The intensity of the popular feeling on the subject is accounted for by the fact that the adulteration is effected either with beef and mutton fat, the eating of which is a deadly sin in the eyes of the Hindoos, or with lard, which the Mahommedans consider unclean food. Both Hindoos and Mahommedans have called on the Government to protect them by legislation, and have urged the necessity for immediate action, so that the measure might come into force before the Doorga Pooja and Mohurrum, the great festivals of the two religious, both of which are now close at hand. Accordingly a provided the Poorsal Landschild. festivals of the two religious, both of which are now close at hand. Accordingly a special meeting of the Bengal Legislative Council was held last Friday, the Lieutenant-Governor coming up from Darjeeling to attend it. The Advocate-General introduced a short Bill, giving the Calcutta Corporation power to inspect and seize impure ghee, and to punish all persons selling it. The Standing Orders having been suspended, the Bill passed through the earlier stages, and was referred to a Select Committee with instructions to report on it in a week. The speeches of the Native members showed clearly how deeply Native feeling was stirred. They insisted that the measure should be extended so as to include the entire province, and not be confined to Calcutta. stirred. They insisted that the measure should be extended so as to include the entire province, and not be confined to Calcutta. Possibly this may be done. The Hon. Joy Program Lull said that a panic had seized upon the whole people. The Hon. Bun Behary Kapur said that as ghee formed the most essential element in the sacrifice known as Homa, the discovery of its a full teration had caused a deadlock in all important religious ceremonies. The Bill will pass through the remaining stages on

The heavy floods in eastern and central Bengal have been causing much anxiety during the last week. Especial alarm was felt regarding the great Laltakuri embankment, the breaching of which about a year ago flooded the entire districts of Moorshed-abad and Nuddea. This embankment, which is some 80 miles long, has been strengthened, and is being carefully watched. But according to telegrams received last night the river had reached the greatest height on record, six inches higher than that of last year, and some slips had occurred at different points.

SEPT. 12.

Telegrams received from up country, however, state that the Ganges is falling; so if the embankment stands two or three days longer the danger will probably be past for this year.

The reports from the eastern districts, Dacca, Mymensingh, and Tipperab, tell of continuous rain and extensive floods, by which the crops are much damaged and the railway and telegraph services are frequently interrupted. In Behar there has also been an extensive rainfall, which will seriously injure the indigo

A somewhat awkward incident occurred in Bombay last week. It appears that the German gunboat Mowe lately arrived at that port to be repaired, and while in dock her crew were accommodated on board the hulk Auckland, which was lent to them. While on the hulk the surgeon of the Mowe died suddenly and the coroner of Bombay, with a jury, went on board for the purpose of holding an inquest. The German captain said he would be obliged if a post mortem were made, and a certificate granted; but he declined to allow an inquest. The coroner thereupon refused to grant a certificate; and without a certificate the body could not be buried. Some delay was caused owing to the absence of all the buried. Some delay was caused owing to the absence of all the members of the Government at Pconah, but eventually a telegram was received from the Governor, ordering that the body should be given a proper burial at once. Accordingly a post mortem examination was held and a certificate granted without the formality of an inquest, and the body was buried. The coroner seems to have shown an excess of zeal, while the fact that no one was left in Bombay with authority to settle the difficuly affords one more instance of the grave inconveniences attending the removal of the entire Government staff from the capitals.

The scheme for redressing the grievances of the Telegraph department lately sanctioned by the Secretary of State has been generally condemned by the department and the Press, and it is so inadequate and impracticable that the Indian Government has been obliged to refer it here again and to recover the the has been obliged to refer it home again, and to press for the acceptance of its original scheme in its entirety. It does not meet the real grievance—namely, the block in promotion caused by the want of inducements for the seniors to retire. What is wanted is not more pay for any one grade, but a flow of promo-tion, by making it worth while for the senior men to retire on

THE AFGHAN FRONTIER COMMISSION.

CHANIAB, SEPT. 6.

When I sent to the Times my telegram of July 20, which was afterwards contradicted by a London journal, the conditions of the demarcation was as follows: -Pillars had been erected as far as Dukchi, forty miles from the Oxus. From Dukchi to the Oxus the direction of the frontier had been agreed upon, but the question remained open as to where it was to meet the Oxus, for the Russian Commissioner claimed Islam, twelve miles above Chamiab, as the ferry of Khoja-Saleh. Thus, as stated by me, about eight square miles of cultivated land and a revenue of a few hundred pounds remained in dispute.

It is understood that the Russian Commissioner now wishes to reopen the sottlement between Dukchi and the Oxus, and claims a point four miles higher up than Islam. The question is to be decided by the two Cabinets. In the meantime, the Joint Commission is dissolved, and the British Commission will return to India on the 15th inst. by way of Cabul.

Cold weather has suddenly set in. The temperature in the tents fell on the 3rd inst. from 120 degrees to 46 degrees, and the weather has since remained cold.

BURMA.

MANDALAY, SEPT. 6.

A military post has been established at Wundwin, completing the chain of posts between Mandalay and Myingyan. Several skirmishes have recently occurred at Nebrurdaw, near Natogye, in which thirty insurgents were killed and twenty-three were taken prisoners.

At Seegor Captain Jackson, of the King's (Liverpool Regiment) with two guns and a small force of men of his regiment and Sepoys, recently had a skirmish with Boshway's force. The enemy was separated from our men by an impassable creek. The Burmese loss is estimated at eighty, while our casualties included only three Sepoys wounded.

Captain Barret, of the 43rd Assam Light Infantry, has had a skirmish at Sautaing with some Shans and carried a small stockade.

Captain Barret was slightly wounded.

The upper and lower Chindwin districts, comprising a tract 500 miles long by 150 wide, have been placed under the charge of Captain Raikes, Deputy Commissioner, who has done very good work in pacifying the district. He has succeeded in enlisting the services of a large number of Burmese officers. Captain Raikes recently ascer ded the Chindwin for 280 miles above Kendat. The country was found to be rich and abounding in valuable mineral deposite. The principal force of insurgents in the Chindwin district is under Prince Shewgyobyee, who holds a strong stockaded position with some 3,000 men.

There is a good deal of sickness at Mandalay. No change has occurred in the depth of the water in the inundated district.

General Macpherson assumed the supreme command of the troops in Burma on the 9th. He will arrive at Mandalay on the For the coming campaign he will have one Major-General and seven Brigadiers under his orders. Seventeen steamers and 34 flats have been chartered from the Irrawaddy Flotilla Company to carry reinforcements from Rangoon. The Flotilla Company are giving much satisfaction to the military authorities by their arrangements. On the arrival of reinforcements vigorous offensive measures will be taken.

On the 6th, Major Aitken, R.A., defeated 200 insurgents at Hlanabin, the enemy's loss being six killed and four prisoners. One Madras Lancer was severely wounded. Boshway is reported to be in considerable strength near Mimbu, and is stated to be preparing strong stockaded positions there.

Mr. Adamson, Deputy Commissioner, has been transferred from Mandalay to Bhamo.

Mr. Bridges, late Secretary to the Government in the Agricultural Department, has been appointed Deputy Commissioner at Mandalay.

CALCUTTA, SEPT. 12.

General Macpherson arrived in Rangoon on Thursday, and was to start for Prome with Sir C. Bernard on the same evening. The original plan of sending a column from Assam via Manipore to co-operate with General Macpherson's force is now abandoned, and only a survey party will be sent in that direction. It is generally felt that this decision is greatly to be regretted, as such a column could be detached without difficulty, and would be likely to have an excellent effect. Possibly the matter may yet. be reconsidered.

PROME, SEPT. 15. Yesterday a small column sent from Thayetmyo to reconnoitre Boshway's position was attacked by him in the jungle, some miles to the north of Thayetmyo. Bushway's force was ambushed. After firing two volleys the enemy retired without loss. On our side Major Auchinleck, of the Scots Fusiliers, and a police officer was a police of the second of the seco a police officer were severely wounded, and there were other casualtics.

General MacPhers:n stayed at Yenangang last night.

Owing to the fact that the Government of India and the French Consul-General have been unable to agree as to the termsof settl ment, all French claims against the late Burmese-Government have been referred to London.

RANGOON, SEPT. 17.

Major Auchinleck has died of his wounds, received in therecent skirmish with Boshway's force.

Sir C. Bernard, who is unwell, has left Rangoon for a week's cruise at sea.

Reinforcements are daily leaving for Upper Burma.

SEPT. 18.

General Macpherson arrived in Mandalay yesterday, on which occasion a considerable military display was made. On landing the General proceeded to the palace, entering by the eastern gate, and was received at the grand entrance by all the officers in Mandalay.

Brigadier-General Anderson telegraphs that the Kycmindini Prince and Buda Raza have moved their forces from Ningyan towards Yemethen, where repeated attacks have been made on our posts. The death of the Myentzein Prince seems to be beyond doubt; several of his followers have come into Mandalay, and they declare that they saw his dead body. It is reported that the Myentzein Prince's two sisters are about to surrender themselves to the authorities at Mandalay.

Boh-Shwaydah, an important insurgent leader in the Toung-dwingyee district, has made overtures for a surrender.

A system of municipal government has been introduced in. Mundalay and its suburbs; and honorary offices, which exempt the holders from taxation, have been conferred on a large-number of Burmans. This is a judicious step, and will probably produce excellent results in Mandalay.

It has been announced, since the recent discussion in Parliament, that the Commissioners enjoy plenary powers of revision and superintendence over the criminal courts in their divisions. Owing to various restrictions this change is of little practical value. A special judicial officer for criminal cases appears to be required in Upper Burma. The numerous other duties of the Commissioners prevent them at present from giving the necessary time to judicial work.

The river is rising at Mandalay.

CALCUTTA, SEPT. 19.

At a meeting of the Legislative Council on Wednesday Mr. Ilbert obtained leave to introduce a Bill for the protection of the indigenous tribes in Burma. He said that its object was to provide for the ejection or exclusion from the villages occupied by the Karens and indigenous tribes of Burmans, Shans, Chinese, and other strangers, who, by settling there, caused much inconvenience and constant breaches of the peace. The persons ejected would be entitled to compensation.

The embarkation of troops for Burma is now proceeding at

AFGHANISTAN.

CALCUTTA, SEPT. 19.

Peports from Cabul have reached India that the Ameer is making great preparations to receive Sir West Ridgeway with proter halours.

BELOOCHISTAN.

CALCUTTA, SEPT. 19.

Captain Broadbent, R.E., will be sent next winter to report on the defences of Pishin and the Khojak Pass.

[RIUTER'S TELEGRAMS.]
RANGOON, SEPT. 17. RANGOON, SEPT. 17.

Intelligence from Mandalay reports that cholera is decreasing there, but the epidemic is raging throughout the district between Myingyan and Ningyan. Many deaths have occurred among the troops. At one place, held by twenty-five men of the 2nd Battalion Liverpool Regiment, eight cases and six deaths occurred in twenty-four hours. The Deputy Surgeon-General and nine surgeons have arrived in Upper Burma within the last six weeks, and eight of these, including the Deputy Surgeon-General, are suffering from fever.

Brigadier-General Griffiths, in command at Bhamo, and Major Cooke, Deputy Commissioner of that place, have been recalled, owing to the failure of their expedition against Kachyen Tsabwa. Captain Adamson, formerly Deputy Commissioner at Mandalay, Captain Adamson, formerly Deputy Commissioner at Mandalay, will succeed Major Cooke.

ANGLO-INDIAN PRESS.

SIR RIVERS THOMPSON.

(Indian Planters' Gazette.)

The early departure of Sir Rivers Thompson naturally recalls the condition of affairs in Ind's on his accession to the Bengal Guddee. Sir Ashley Eden had left the shores of India amid a perfect blaze of European and Native social fireworks, and before he reached the Sandheads the comfortable news was communicated to him that he had been appointed to a seat in the India Council.

"Ripon the Good" was just launching his famous Local Self-Government Bill, and the first strains of praise and oriental metaphor were beginning to rise from the Native Press:—

"The breezy call of incense breathing morn."

A new political morn, the herald star of which was "trembling into day" in the shape of "Lokil Sluf." There was peace within and around the borders of India, and Sir (then Mr.) Rivers Thompson extered Belvedere as quietly as any elderly Indian gentleman would move into a new residence. No doubt he had his own mental reflections as he took up his abode in the favourite residence of Warren Has.ings and looked across the grounds and moved through the rooms in which the greatest of all the moved through the rooms, in which the greatest of all the Governors-General spent some of the best years of his life. Sir Rivers Thompson entered on his duties with the experience of thirty years of Indian life behind him, and no one knew better thirty years of Indian life behind him, and no one knew better than he that what little good he might be able to accomplish in the few years of his tenure of office could be effected only by steady application to the immediate everyday duties of his office. No one knew better than he the futility of brand new schemes for the regeneration, politically and socially, of our Aryan brethers. The thirty years of his Indian sojourn had taught him that regenera ion must have very lowly beginnings, that, to be permanent, it must reach deep down to the people themselves, and that it must take several generations to accomplish such a herinning. it must take several generations to accomplish such a beginning. Ready and anxious to aid every good cause, Sir Rivers Thompson has throughout the whole tenure of his office been distinguished for that knowledge, m deration and wisdom which go a long way to constitute a statesman of the first rank. The Rent Bill nightmare had sat on the stomachs of Bengal zemindars for years and with that manly independence which has all along marked the public life of Sir Rivers Thompson, he defended and materially aided the Government of India in passing the measure which became law so recently. It was, however, during the Ilbert Bill controversy that His Honour the Lieutenant Governor conferred on the entire European community of India obligations which it is hoped they will not willingly forget. Suffering from long ill-health when the Viceroy and his Council reached Calcutta in the December of 1883, S.r. Rivers Thompson had undergone a severe operation, and for some time his life hung trembling in the balance. Nevertheless, when the discussion on the bill came up in Council Sir Rivers Thompson was in his place day after day; wasted to a shadow, and so weak as scarcely to be able to walk alone. The plucky old Indian came prepared to make a fighting speech of some hours in duration, a task which is sometimes beyond the strength even of the most robust. The speeches he did make were marked by that clear insight, independence and modesty which have formed some of the marked features of his life.

Though the memory of things Indian is evanescent enough this generation of Anglo-Indians is not likely to forget the great personal sacrifice which Sir Rivers Thompson made to defend their rights against the harmonious-text-book-gemini Ripon and Ilbert.

In his dealings with the Calcutta Municipality, one of the most bumptious and asinine-headed in India, Sir Rivers Thompson held firmly that necessary sanitary improvements must be carried out, if not by the Municipality, then by Government at the city's expense. In his attitude towards the city fathers, the fathers of expense. In his attitude towards the city fathers, the fathers of the city of dismal and diversified stinks, Sir Rivers Thompson had the sympathy and support of the entire European community. No man has in recent years been more foully abused and bespattered with dirt by the Native Press than Sir Rivers Thompson. When he ascended the Guddee of Bengal the graduates and undergraduates of missionaries and Government Colleges, who form the gentle flock of young r aring lions of the Native Press, thought they had got hold of a "goody-goody" religious fanatic who would be pliable as wax between the palms of Oriental hyperbole and metaphor. Instead of a soft nut to crack they found a bullet between their teeth, and expectorated and vituperated nyperbole and metaphor. Instead of a soft nut to crack they found a bullet between their teeth, and expectorated and vituperated copiously. Sir Rivers Thompson, when he lays down office, more than any previous ruler of Bengal, will carry with him to his retirement the respect, esteem and admiration of his countrymen in India; and the wish which will follow him to England from the hearts of the domiciled community in India is, that the closing years of his life may be peaceful and happy, and that the ripe wisdom and experience of Sir Rivers Thompson may not be loss.

OFFICIAL SALARIES IN INDIA. (Times of India Correspondent.)

It may be asked, (1) whether Indian salaries much exceed. English salaries for similar work: (2) whether Indian official salaries much exceed Indian private salaries for similar work. (3) whether the depreciation of Indian official salaries of late years is real, and has affected recruiting. The first question is complicated by a consideration of the compulsory needs of Indian service. It is not essential that an Indian servant should keep more horses than he requires for his work. He cannot, on the other hand, do with ut some. He can order no "cab" for eight annas to transport him to office, but he must keep his own transport. Between him and a change of air, periodically essential to his physical efficiency, his somethousands of miles, and his emcluments must enable him to cross the Gulf. The midging of that Gulf by steam only increases the temptation to cross it. It is, again, idle to ignore social instincts, or to argue that the employer of labour need not consider the standard of comfort. He must consider what the labourer will consider. Hence even inevitable matrimony involves its compul-(3) whether the depreciation of Indian official salaries of late scandard of countries. The inevitable matrimony involves its compulsory expenditure. Pare and pare away as you please the compulsory expenditure of the Indian civilian, and a residue will still remain which cannot be eliminated as an addition to the cost in India of the same article in the Euglish market. Fix the percentageof addition, and compare the Indian wage with the London wage. Whitaker's Almanack will supply enough figures and the result of a fair inquiry will dissipate the fallacy that the Indian service, even compared with the British public service, is generally overpaid. To correct the result arrived at another inquiry must be made. India requires and gets a higher standard of physical and educational efficiency than the paid public service in England, supplemented as it is by volu tary labour, secures. If any critic would inquire into the value of the Indian service as a mere financial speculation, let him select any member of it, and examine his position at school or college when he left England. Let him follow up the careers of a dozen of the civilian's colleagues in the Sixth Form or at the college scholar's table, strike leagues in the Sixth Form or at the college scholar's table, strike an average in their present wages, and compare them with the wage of the Indian civilian. I know some at least who have pursued this method with the result that they have found the conclusion that the public service in India is, from a money point of view, no longer a decent investment for a boy who can reach the top of a public school in England, or sit at the scholar's table at his college. Nor does a comparison of official salaries in India with those of private salaries shake my mistrust of the gilding with which the pins of reduced official salaries are cunningly prepared. An Accountant-General, whose civil budget estimate alone contains receipt of eleven mi lions, and an expenditure of nine millions sterling that must be checked throughout a whole province, receives its 2,750 a month. Could a manager of the Bank of Bengal be secured for that wage? The Commissioner of a whole division receives about the same. The Commissioner of a whole division receives about the same. Would the Dewau of Baroda be content with lcs? A High Court Judge receives Rs. 3,750, would even a prominent barrister count this a prize? Out of a service of 160 civilians, employed in an area of about 198,000 square miles, more than half receive less than £1,000 a year. Yet many of them have served Government for over fifteen years and cannot, though they would, resign the service. Business men in Bombay can judge whether a wage of £1,000 a year for compuls ry service past middle life is excessive, when the requisite qualifications and the necessary costs of the office are considered. The Commissioner of a whole division receives about the same. office are considered.

But the strongest and least contraverted of all arguments is the depreciation of the service in the last twenty years. It is not merely that the ru, ee has fallen, but that promotion is 80 per cent, slower than it was twenty years ago, whilst salaries are Tittle changed. There are men in the service who will finish their service before they rise to a 1 e-manent salary of £1,000 a year. Deferred promotion means delayed retirement, no savings, and general discontent. But I must not linger on this view of the marter. The critic who lightly declaims against the extravagance of official salaries, does not take the trouble to listen to the refutation. A reply to his challenge provokes personalities, and I must confess, that of all offensive small talk the monetary affairs of my neighbour disgust me most. Official wages are, however, a matter of public interest. Granted that the public are only barely satisfied with the quality of labour they now employ. A reduction of wages, inevitably involving a reduction of efficiency, is a serious matter to the employer. A friend of mine asked several of the leading schoolmasters in England whether they had noticed any depreciation in the public market for labour of the value of the Indian Civil Service. The answer was in the affirmative, and the explanation was given that the "prospects are bad." His experience may be refuted by others; all that I desire is to express the belief that the quack nostrum or that "a general reduction of official salaries will cure India's ailment." requires anaylsis by the application of the tests which I have pointed out. If these salaries can be reduced without loss of "inciency not a day should be lost in relieving the public of an unnecessary burden. But argument, and not declamation, is necessary. It is true that official life in India is in some respects more comfortable and less dangerous than it was, but it is not true that it is less expensive or more attractive. A revision of the salaries of higher appointments is perhaps possible, but many are sceptical as to whether much economy can be effected. In any case, the full facts are not before the public, and nothing short of a public commission of inquiry can produce the material upon which a final judgment can be expressed. Much is made of th

THE AGE LIMITS FOR THE INDIAN CIVIL SERVICE. (Pioneer.)

As regards the age question, one has only to read the minute of the late Viceroy to be satisfied that sufficient materials for forming a sound opinion on the subject do not at present exist. In order to make out a case for raising the age to 21 or 22, it has to be shown that the men obtained at present are distinctly inferior to those obtained in former days, and that the inferiority is the result of the lower age. The inferiority may be in natural abilities, or in imperfect education, or in physique. Now the fact of this inferiority has not as yet been establish d. A certain number of young Civilians have died or have been invalided, and others have proved indifferent officers. But such cases were known under the old system, and the general verdict of Provincial Government seems to be that there is not any very marked difference between the old and the young Civilians. Lird Ripon, however, was characteristically not content with this appeal to facts. He founded his advocacy of a change on general considerations, and formulated these considerations so as to support the crammers had not, as it was hoped, been defeated. Aud, secondly, that the higher age gave India a more highly educated man. His first point must be admitted, but it is not very important. The "crammer" is simply the special tutor, and the special tutor will beat the university or the public school over any course and under any conditions if the prize is such as to make it worth his while to run pupils for it. The dislike to crammers on the part of the schoolmaster is intelligible. But why the Indian Government or the India Office should seek to encourage the latter at the expense of the former passes comprehension. The second contention that the higher limit of age secures a better education is of much more weight. It looks as if it must be true, since it merely involves the proposition. It is said by English educational authorities that the lower age gives India the pick of the public schools to a degree unknown under the former system. Indeed i raw material is more important than the polish. Another argument in favour of the lower linit of age is that the young Civilian gets to his work while he is still fresh and pliable. Bring a formed man out to India, and it is very questionable whether he will take to the country and his new life. In the case of a youth of twenty the odds are in favour of his quickly adapting himself to his surroundings. Lord Ripon would probably rejoin that this rapid assimilation is the very thing which is not wanted in Indian administrators. Throughout their career they should represent the latest phase of English radicalism, and be as detached as possible from Indian habits of thought. Whether this view will recommend itself to students of the question we know not. Certainly it has not hitherto been accepted as a principle of Indian administration. To know the country and to rule it in the light of this intimate knowledge have hitherto been the cardinal merits of Indian rulers. This policy can well stand an appeal to its results: and we hope it will be maintained in spite of any reconstructive changes which the Indian Services may undergo.

BURMESE AND BRITISH RULE.

(Rangoon Gazette).

Ten lakhs of rupees is not a very large sum to spend on Civil Public Works in such a country as Upper Burma, but it is as much as could reasonably be expected in the first year of our occupation, and while the military and police expenditure is still so heavy. Even the expenditure of ten lakhs, however, marks a new era in the history of the country. None of the Native kings would ever have thought of putting money into circulation in this way. Their ideas of spending money all ran in the groove of increased luxury in their own palace, and every pice which could be raised over and above the actual cost of maintaining themselves on the throne went in selfish indulgence or in senseless extravagance of some kind. With ten lakhs at command a Burmese king would have increased the number of ladies in the palace, or would have loaded the existing ones even more profusely with jewels. If he were of a less amorous disposition be would have increased the number of jewelled betel-boxes and spittoons in the palace; would have added to the number of his guards, or would have invested in useless cotton mills and other machinery if he had the trading instincts of old King Min Done.

Min Done.

If he were courting popularity, or if he had somewhat more generous feelings than autocratic monarchs generally have, he might have started some great holiday and rejoicing for the people with boat-races, poays and such like things in abundance. But though this would have been a less selfish form of expenditurathan jewelled spittoons and golden cradles it is just as unproductive of any real and permanent good to the people. The more intelligent Burmese must surely think of these things sometimes, and if they do they cannot fail to note the difference. Under Burmese rule lakhs had been squandered in filling the palace with utterly useless, though expensive, lumber, which did no good to anyone. "Rooms were filled with gew-gaws and toys that no one ever looked at, and the heaps of unset rubies and sapphires were equally unproductive: while the royal babies slept no better in their golden cradles than they would have done in the humblest wooden ones. Yet, while untold wealth was thus utterly, uselessy buried in the palace, there was neither road nor railway in the country, and no means of communication whatever except those provided by Nature. In all the districts remote from the Irrawaddy the people were as hopelessly shut off from any market for any surplus grain they might grow as if they had inhabited an unknown island in some remote sea. Even the irrigation works, which had been made in former times to reclaim land for cultivation, had apparently been neglected by the later kings; and Mr. Gordon tells us that large tracts of land have actually been thrown out of cultivation.

It is surely a significant sign, and we wish the Burmese could only be brought to see its significance, of the wholly different

It is surely a significant sign, and we wish the Burmese could only be brought to see its significance, of the wholly different character of British rule, that immediately after the annexation of the country expenditure is at once turned into such channels as irrigation, roads, and railways. Sir Charles Bernard does not even wait for surplus revenue to accumulate but at once clears out the litter of expensive rubbish, jewelled spittoons, golden cradles, and unproductive machinery, which had accumulated in the palace, and begs for ten lakhs from the Indian Government to be spent in the ways which will tend most certainly to the increased prosperity and wealth of the people of Upper Burma. It would of course be quite useless to argue with the dacoits and other such gentry, who pose as the champions of a patriotic preference for Native rule; but it is surely not too much to ask that the more intelligent and better educated Burmese gentle-

It would of course be quite useless to argue with the dacoits and other such gentry, who pose as the champions of a patriotic preference for Native rule; but it is surely not too much to ask that the more intelligent and better educated Burmere gentlemon, and the Vernacular Press, should sometimes show up the contrast between the two systems of rule in such points as these. It does not need any very intimate acquaintance with political economy to see the difference which will be made, even in a very few years, if the surplus revenue is steadily turned, year after year, into such channels as rigation works, roads and railways, instead of being squandered in more ostentation, or locked up in the store-rooms of the Pa'ace. In the latter case it was dead, as was the hoard which European peasants of former generations used to hide in an old stocking; and even as a hoard it was only valuable to the reigning monarch, being of no use even in this way to the people at large. Invested in public works it begins to benefit the people at large at once; firstly, by affording occupation to great numbers; and, secondly, by either giving them more and better land to cultivate, or by enabling them to exchange their surplus produce for the productions of other countries. We have said nothing about the British Government's much larger expenditure on maintaining and administering justice than any of the Burmese kings ever thought necessary. We have not touched on the vast difference to, the people between a Government which pays for all work done, and one which demands gratuitous labour. These things are so obvious that every one who wishes can see them. The difference between an expenditure of ten lakhs on public works and a similar outlay on jewelled spittoons and golden cradles is not so likely to strike people who have not specially studied political economy; but, the difference once pointed out, every candid person must admit that, judged by the test of consideration for the welfare of the people, the British Government is far ahead of that which it has superseded. With the disciples of Buddha, this should have the greatest weight. It is most inconsistent for a people whose creed lays such stress on works for the benefit of one's fellow-creatures, to side with a Government which did nothing for the people, against one which makes their welfare and prosperity its first care.

MILITARY DEPARTMENTAL CENTRALISATION. (Bombay Gazette.)

It is a source of gratification even to the non-military element, It is a source of gratification even to the non-military element, though in a less degree than to the Army in general, to know that at last the Government of India and Sir Frederick Roberts are considering the best way to modify the excessive centralisation in the administration of the Army and the large departments connected therewith. Centralisation when carried to the degree that now exists not only entails on the head office of reference far more work than it can possibly do efficiently, but it strangles the sense of responsibility and self-reliance in those whose actions and suggestions are under reference. The main question which and suggestions are under reference. The main question which a scheme of decentralisation will involve will be that of the a scheme of decentralisation will involve will be that of the powers of expenditure of certain departmental officers and general officers, without being subject to voluminous correspondence with examiners, controllers, &c., in the Finance Department. The petty and irritating objection statements with which our departments are so painfully familiar may, we hope, soon be abolished, as ninety-nine times out of a hundred they mean, "You say you have incurred an expenditure of these few rupees or annas, but we have incurred an expenditure of these few rupees or annas, but we have the trust you have the trust we have a proof the second the second the second that the cannot trust you unless you produce this voucher, that voucher," &c. This frequently happens when the expenditure is incurred under the orders of superior authority, and when the expending officer is in such a position that there can be no doubt that the money was not unnecessarily spent. The red-tapeism which surrounds the Military Finance Department in the Examining offices is the Military Finance Department in the Examining offices is almost past belief, and the enormous staff of clerks who are kept up to discover mare's nests (as most frequently they turn out to be) in the accounts of commanding and departmental officers would form a small army, though of very bad material. Frequently the absurdity of the objections which are raised by the Examiners is such that one can but charitably suppose that they do not as a rule scrutinise what is brought before them to sign. The following instance is a fair example, and must not by any means be taken as more extraordinary than many of the objections. A liberal and paternal Government, knowing that soldiers wives and children after a long residence in India are soldiers wives and children after a long residence in India are likely to suffer very much from cold on nearing England in the winter months, and knowing, too, that they are not able to provide themselves with warm clothing, sanctions the issue at Bombay of certain warm article of apparel, among other things, Bombay of certain warm article of apparel, among other things, warm stockings to the women. A certain cheeseparing Examiner objected to this issue by the Commissariat Officer in Bombay on the grounds that socks were much cheaper than tockings, and that therefore socks should have been issued. Of course the objection was overruled. It is said that the reply of the Commissariat Officer to the Examiner was somewhat as follows:—"That he was surprised at the objection, as he understood the examiner was a married man, and that he should have known that the fair sex were not in the habit of wearing socks." Numberless instances of this kind might be quoted, many if possible more absurd. Now, to a certain extent, the decentralisation scheme which is in contemplation would not require such expenditure by a Commissariat Officer to be examined. A certain issue is authorised, and it de-Officer to be examined. A certain issue is authorised, and it departmental officers are given credit for honesty and doing the partmental officers are given credit for honesty and doing the best for the Government they serve, no such examination is necessary. If such examinations are necessary then our officers are not fit for the positions they toold. This indeed appears at present to be the prevailing principle—that from General Officers Commanding Divisions, through the various grades of commanding and departmental officers down to the junior Sut-Assis: nt Commissary-Generals, no one can have the slightest common sense or honesty of purpose. It is this fatal principle which we hope ere long to see broken through and cast aside, as it strikes at the very roots of efficiency and self-reliance.

When war breaks out, Military Commanders must have the

When war breaks out, Military Commanders must have the direct control and ordering of a most enormous expenditure. Is the present system, adopted in time of peace, the best way totrain a man to understand and regulate the expenditure of very large sums in time of war? Most certainly not. But a General Officer can surely be trusted to honestly regulate expenditure without undue extravagance and waste during time of peace if he is to be trusted in time of war with very much larger powers of spending. The many heads of expenditure for military purposes may be divided into three branches: Original expenditure, within budget limits; current expenditure, which is approximately estimated for; and extraordinary expenditure. Now if the very smallest change or transfer of however small a sum from one head to the other takes place such is the financial control that it must be referred to the Government of India. Those high-officials who are supposed to keep the machinery of the Army going have really no independent authority. There-officials are the Commander-in-Chief, Commissary-General-in-Chief, Director-General of Ordnance in India, Surgeon-General of Her Majesty's Forces, and the Inspector-General of Military Works. Now, it would appear to the uninitiated that each of these very high officials, whose experience must be great, whose previous career must have been distinguished to have obtained the post, would be able to regulate and be responsible for the expenditure of his particular department, and that there would be no need for examination of accounts after having been once approved by the head of the department. Butnot. The financial control and minute criticism of expenditure is such that the accounts of each of these great departments are scrutinised and commented upon and objected to by numerous comparatively junior officers, who rejoice in the titles of Examiner of Ordnance Accounts, Pay Examiner, Examiner of Commissariat-Accounts, Examiner of Medical Accounts, &c., and these individuals are quite ready to tak

That the Government should be burdened with the responsibility of every trifling question connected with expenditure into the Military Department is absurd, because the Government of India proper cannot see one-hundredth part of the references, and so the decisions are come to and orders sent forth by that portion of the Government represented by some very junior officers in the Military Secretariat, whose experience and knowledge of what is just and proper expenditure it is impossible to compare with that of the officers of high rank whom we have mentioned. We understand that with reference to the expenditure by Departmental officers, and the control to be exercised over it by General officers, the military authorities hold somewhat the following views. That the audit by Examiners should be withdrawn from certain classes of expenditure, and that there should be local account offices. That the General's order should be sufficient for certain current departmental expenditure, and there should be no audit other than that of the Controller. The system of vouchers is to be simplified; and, lastly, objection statements for small sums are to be done away with, and no objection statement is to be framed unless there is a departure from regulations. Small sums vouched for by responsible officers are not to be subjected to criticism. If these ideas ever bear fruit (from a military point of view alone), there will be an immense gain, expenditure will not be increased, an enormous amount of correspondence will be done away with, and a perpetual source of irritation and annoyance to regimental and departmental officers will be withdrawn. In other words, a system of trust and responsibility for economical expenditure will pervade the service.

THE Darjeeling paper is responsible for the statement that an influential wood contractor is now under arrest at Darjeeling, on charges of treasonable correspondence with the fugitive Nepaulese princes, sons of Jung Bahadur, now at Nepal. About forty compromising letters are said to have been found on the man. He is also charged with enlisting soldiers to serve against the present dynasty in Nepal—attempting to war in fact with a friendly State. The case has not yet been settled.

The Ad ocate-General's opinion would place Government above the law, for he contends that what Government does is a matter of public policy, and is therefore privilege. It should therefore, he argues, be allowed to make its own terms when availing itself of the support of private has it is felt that Government should make its terms. enterprise, but it is felt that Government should make its terms beforehand, and that to allow it to force its terms afterwards upon contractors is to take advantage of their helples position. The least that could be done when suits are brought would be to go into the evidence and decide the claims upon their merits.

Tun Indian Daily News is informed of the discovery of a large seam of coal at a place close to Mudhapore Station owned by the Raja of Punch Kote. The seam commences at a distance of not more than 134 yards from the surface, and, what is of the utmost importance, it is in the neighbourhood of a railway station.

The floods in Champaran, Tirhoot, and Darbhanga will, says a Calcutta paper, no doubt be productive of good results to the opium cultivation. Large tracts of country lying on either side of the Sikrana, Bagmutti, Pur Ganduck, and the many smaller streams which intersect those northern districts have been submerged, and the bhadai crop is utterly destroyed. These flooded tracts will, however, yield a richer poppy crop, and the ryots, eager to recoup themselves for their loss, will resort largely to the opium calcive they have done opium cultivation, as under similar circumstances they have done in other years.

LORD KINDERLEY, in his despatch of 29th July, acknowledges receipt of three letters from the Madras Government regarding the suspension of Mr. Crole, and a reference on the subject from the Government of India, says he agrees with the Madras Government that Mr. Crole conducted himself inconsiderately and in a manner by no means becoming in his official position, yet he is unable to look upon his conduct in the very serious light in which the Government viewed it. He agrees with the Government of India that it was difficult for the public to distinguish ment of India that it was difficult for the public to distinguish between proprietorship in the Riching's Estate of Mr. Sullivan, junior, and his father. It is shown that the latter had a substantial interest in the estate, and that Mr. Crole was fully justified in bringing the actual facts to the knowledge of the Government. His fault was, and a serious fault, that he used intemperate language, and made insinuations against Mr. Sullivan which were not warranted by the facts. He introduced certain imaginary grievances of his own which had nothing to do with the case. Although, therefore, Mr. Crole merited punishment Lord Kim berley cannot think him to have been so far to biame as to deserve an expension for an entire were transfer. deserve so severe a penalty as suspension for an entire year. Lord Kimberley was of opinion that the punishment which he will have undergone at the date of receipt of the dispatch will meet the requirements of the case, and thinks that the suspension should then cease. Mr. Crole should also be saved from losing during his suspension his time for persion. It would not be for the interests of the public service that Mr. Crole should be employed as soon as there is a fitting opportunity in an office cor-responding with his present rank and emolument.

THE Madras Mail says:—The Viceroy proposes to pay Mysore a visit in November or December, on his way from Ilyderabad to Calcutta; and he will probably think it well worth his while to visit the scene of mining activity in Kolar. That activity is intimately connected with the silver question which is causing his Government profound anxiety. The world's great causing his Government profound anxioty. The world's great want is the metal which is being brought to light at Kolar; and, on public grounds, Lord Dufferin will give his moral support to all enterprises in this country for increasing the world's stock of that metal. It is a suggestive fact that the pioneer mine at Kolar is at the present moment wielding for riches quarte than Kolar is at the present moment yielding far richer quartz than any mine now being worked in any other part of the world. The prospects of the field have greatly improved in the last six months, and from what he sees on the surface, and below ground, the Viceroy may be led to believe that India will very soon take high rank as a gold-producing country.

BOMBAY.

THE Times of India hears that a public meeting of the Hindu community of Bombay will shortly be held for an expression of opinion against any legislative enactments being deemed neces-sary in the case of infant marriages among their commuity.

A NEW company has been started in Bombay called the "Indian Railways Feeder Lines Company, Limited," with a capital of one lakh of rupees, for the purpose of constructing feeder lines to the large trunk lines wherever the present road traffic gives a prospect of present and future increased profit. The lines will be on the two-feet six-inch gauge, which, it is asserted, can be laid down at from Rs. 10,000 to Rs. 15,000 per mile, including rolling-stock, according to the nature of the ground. The first experiment is to be tried with a line about five miles in length from the Nassik road Station on the Great Indian Peninsula Railway to Nassik city, where there is at pre-sent a considerable amount of traffic. Should this line be succcssful, the capital of the Company will be increased and other lines be undertaken.

The agitation for reform in the Bench and Bar of Bombay would have been much more popularly supported, says the Times of India, had it been conducted in a more dignified manner. There is undoubtedly ample room for reform, but we cannot think that the Government of Bombay have any right whatever to discuss the merits and demerits of the High Court with a body like the Committee of the Chamber of Commerce. The High Court is the most useful and most important institution in India, and its usefulness must be marred if Government are permitted without general censure to treat it without due respect and in a way that can only be described as "high and mighty." The Committee of the Chamber of Commerce, on the other hand, In a Committee of the Chamber of Commerce, on the other hand, is an irresponsible body that may discuss any possible subject, from the effects of sun-spots on the price of grain to the moral and material advantages of short length piece-goods. The Committee had a perfect right to address Government on the subject of the High Court as on any other subject, but Government out of simple respect for the Supreme Tribunal of Justice should have contented themselves with forwarding the Chamber's memorial to the Judges, with a request that the Judges would be good enough to accede to it through the Government.

One stormy night a young man, wandering in the rocky and pathless fastnesses of Lebanon, got belated, and lost his way. It would have fared ill with him had not a Druse Chieftain taken pity on the stranger whom destiny had thus thrown in his path; so he gave him food and shelter from the rain and wind. years elapsed, and it chanced that the same youth once again repaired to scenes which had become endeared by the friendships he had found on the occasion when his life had been saved; but at this time there was war in the land, and the Druses, getting the worst of the combat, were well-nigh exterminated. getting the worst of the combat, were well-nigh exterminated. This circumstance afforded the traveller—who, being a Christian, was left unmolested—to repay the debt of gratitude. So in the midst of the fray he and a friend, with whom he was accompanied, dashed into the thick of the fight, and seizing two desolate children belonging to the house of the friendly Druse he dragged them forth, and, taking them by the hand, hid the terrified pair in a secret cave till the carnage, which had made their mothers willow and her offspring or phans, had come to an their mother a widow and her offspring orphans, had come to an end. After a while, creeping forth, the little band betook themselves to the regions of Damascus—safe and sound. Years rolled away, and the young couple were taken to Paris to receive an education befitting their position as the adopted children of their deliverer. deliverer.

Let us leave them in the midst of the shadow of obscurity which for so lengthened a period they were surrounded, and direct our attention to the Ladies' Gallery of the House of Greet our attention to the Ladies' Gallery of the House of Commons, where on one eventful evening there sat a lady—by far the leveliest of all those present—who came from nobody knew where, and who as time went on, and no gentleman appeared to disturb her absorbed and intense contemplation of what was going on beneath, gradually excited the curiosity of her eager companions in a very marked degree. Attention had been first called to her partly by her having secured the best seat, to the exclusion of certain ladies, each of whom thought the political position of her husband gave her a right to it, partly by the size and lustre of two diamonds in her ears, and the richby the size and lustre of two diamonds in her ears, and the richness and perfect taste of her costume, and, lastly, by the extraordinary depth and brilliancy of her large eyes as she turned them for an instant on some new-comer, revealing as she did so a face so beautiful that it was evident she must be a stranger, or with such advantages she could not have failed to take society The Gallery was on the tiptoe of curiosity, and many and manifold were the whispers amongst the surrounding ladies as to the history of the unknown visitant. But a commotion soon turned their thoughts elsewhere, for a critical division was about to take place, and the House was in that frenzy of excitement which is the invariable accompaniment of such occasions. The possessor of the diamonds, catching the enthusiasm by which she was sur-rounded, turned for explanation to a member of Parliament, who had strolled upstairs to chat with his friends? Reginald Clareville was so dazzled by the brilliancy of the gaze which accompanied the inquiry that he felt himself slightly colouring as he proceeded to afford the fair stranger the information he was so well able to give, and she on her part was no less will-ing to receive. And so he rattled away till the divison bell warned him that he must perform the most important of his legislative functions. But his interest had been aroused, and after voting he returned in company with his friend, Sebastian Hartwright, to look after the unprotected semale who had excited such curiosity in his mind. If, however, this feeling was, in the first instance, strongly felt, imagine his astonishment when in the course of conversation he forced from her an unwilling confession. sion that she had come not so much to witness the debate as to display an interest in two of the legislators—to wit, Sebastian Hartwright and Reginald Clareville! The former, being at the time in conversation with Lady Clareville, had not heard the strange avowal, but the latter, impervious as he had hitherto been to attack from the feminine armoury, became conscious that this unknown stranger was throwing a spell over him which he was at a loss to describe. Still he made a vigorous effort of will to resent the enticements of the enchantress, and muttering to himself that she was an adventuress, with sham diamonds, he proceeded to give the conversation a more repellent and chilling turn. But the Gallery was emptying rapidly, and there was no time for a war of words. So, handing the mysterious stranger into her brougham, he asked if he might be permitted to know the name of a lade with when he had no account to the name of a lade with when he had no account to the name of a lade with when he had no account to the name of a lade with when he had no account to the name of a lade with when he had no account to the name of a lade with when he had not account to the name of a lade with when he had not account to the name of a lade with when he had not account to the name of a lade with when he had not account to the name of a lade with when he had not account to the name of a lade with when he had not account to the name of a lade with the name of the name the name of a lady with whom he had passed so agreeable a -quartre d'heure. The carriage dashed off and left him standing bewildered, astonished, and unhinged, staring at a card bearing the plain superscription "Amina Masollam." Who was riche? How did she know the name alike of himself and his friend Sebastian Hartwright? Puzzling questions; aye, and bewildering is the romance which the author has presented to his readers that the history of the unknown stranger may be unravelled. We will not say more than that as the scene opens in Lebanon so it closes amongst the Druses, and add that the denouement is so utterly unexpected that not one in a the denouement is so utterly unexpected that have the thousand will ever guess the plot.

What is to be the criticism of this most strange novel? As far as interest is concerned there is no lack of that needful accompaniment to a work of fiction, and it is no exaggeration that needful to assert that there is scarcely a chapter which is void of situation"—many of them most dramatic, all of them most romantic. Yet it must be avowed that, dealing as the tale ≺" situation " largely does with occult mysticisms and hidden secrets of the unknown world, there is such an air of mystery through its pages that the mind gets bewildered, and the reader yearns for the plain unsophisticated scenes of everyday life. As an effort of imagination Mr. Laurence Oliphant's work stands forth absolutely un procached and unapproachable, but we doubt whether it will add materially to that talented writer's reputation. But it will be read with interest, and when once commenced it is not easy to lay it aside; and, after all, this is the aim and object of a work of the hour.

HESTER'S VENTURE.*

The deus ex machina of this story is one Herr Müllner (Anglice Milner), who, having risen from the ranks, has purchased a great-deal of property in the immediate neighbourhood of a West-country village. Being a man of enterprise, he turns the village into a watering-place, and translates his somewhat original views on the welfare of the people into bricks and mortar by erecting a theatre, with the special object of furnishing the lower classes with rational amusement, and thus keeping them out of the grog shops. Of course his every endeavour for the good of the place is opposed by one of the impracticable local boards so common in the West country (alas, not only there!) and which Kingsley has so admirably depicted in his "Two Years Ago."

Müllner has no son, and much of the story resolves itself into speculations what he will do with his wealth: the ultimate disposal of which is left to be inferred rather than stated.

The villain is, as so often happens, a member of the profession so uncharitably termed the "Devil's Own." He had in earlier life been engaged in City business, and had procured the commission of a forgery and a theft, which, for the time, "set him up." The latter offence cast an undeserved slur on the character of the manager. This is none other than the father of the hero, who is a literary man and artistic connoisseur of some

The ladies are numerous. First in order comes the heroine, Hester Torrington, whose grandmother (with whom she lives) is the most charming character in the book. Hester, driven from home by the unkindness of the wife of her half-brother, makes her "venture" by leaving home for London, and, as is means rarely the case with heroines in recent novels, resolves to depend for subsistence on the work of her own hands, being, though of good family, in reduced circumstances. The inevitable foil is an actress, Olivia Vane, to whom Hester had shown kindness when ill during a country engagement, and in whose stepfather's house in London she resides. Both these characters, that of the impulsive Olivia especially, are well and consistently drawn, while a touch of comedy is imparted by the airs of the stepfather, himself a worn-out actor, who is never tired of recounting his early dramatic successes.

A chance interview which took place between Hester and Berg, the villain of the piece, overheard by Olivia's aunt, rouses the jealousy of Olivia, whom Berg had been courting, and brings about a denouement, just as Hester was, from family considera-tions, about to leave London. The means and manner of this occurrence the reader must learn from the book itself.

We can unreservedly commend this volume, both as being interesting, and as one which may safely be placed in anybody's hands. The characters, too, are consistent. It would be wrong not to select as particularly good, besides those above referred to, the actively-benevolent Müllner, and Hester's no less actively disagreeable half-brother, John Torrington. The interest, too, is well sustained to the close of a story which will not fail to command many readers.

Amongst these books will be "Journals in Hyderabad and Kashmir," by Sir Richard Temple, edited by Captain R. C. Captain Lionel Trotter, who long ago won literary fame by his history of the British Empire in India, contributes, in two volumes, the "History of India under Victoria from 1836 to 1880." Professor Sidney Owen brings out a new edition of his book "India on the Eve of the British Conquest"; a new and enlarged edition of Colonel W. F. B. WE had thought that missionaries of the type of Brothers Barrel and Ringletaube had been exterminated by Sydney Smith, and that the destruction of a Hindu was no longer regarded as equivalent to the creation of a Christian. It seems we were in equivalent to the creation of a Christian. It seems we were in error. According to the correspondent of a Bombay paper there is at Bangalore a mission known as Miss Anstey's Mission. A short time ago a convert to this mission was seized with a sudden access of zeal. He got hold of a Brahmin boy, brought him within the precincts of the mission house, and there shaved his skull and destroyed the Brahminical thread. It is to be hoped that the authorities will let Miss Anstey, or whoever the superintendent of the mission may be, know that conversion by the edge of the razor is as obsolete as conversion at the point of the edge of the razor is as obsolete as conversion at the point of the snord.

THE MOUNTAIN AND THE MOUSE.

THERE has been a repetition of the ancient fable; the mountain has been in labour and, as of old, the result is a ridiculous mouse. The Governor-General of India in Council writing from Simla has, under pressure of the India Office, furnished a statement showing "so far as possible" the extra annual cost upon the taxpayers of India in consequence of the annual migration of Government to that station. The time required to bring forth the information which, like the nurse's baby in Marryat's novel, is "a very little one," appears to have been the ordinary. period of nine months. In May, 1884, Lord Kimberley sent a despatch to Lord Ripon in Council informing him that an application had been made in the House of Commons for "a Return showing the annual dates since the transfer of the Government of India to the Crown in 1858, of the migration of the Government of India from Calcutta to Simla and the dates of its return to Calcutta; and the extra annual cost imposed upon the taxpayers of India in consequence of this annual migration of Government." The despatch stated that there was not information in the India Office to admit of the preparation of such a Return with accuracy, "including, as it should, the extra charge arising in all departments, whether military, postal, telegraph, or otherwise," and that, therefore, it was decided not to accede to the application of the House until it was ascertained how far it was in the power of the Government of India to compile such a statement. Lord Kimberley then shows considerable anxiety lest the cost of the information might be excessive, for the despatch concludes

I am of opinion that, if the complete compilation would involve a great deal of labour and expense, the statement of cost should be limited to the last few years. The dates of quitting Calcutta for Simla, and of the return to Calcutta, should be entered for the whole pericd. I shall be glad to learn how for the request can be met without undue cost

This concern about the cost of a Return which was supposed to deal with an extraordinary and excessive expenditure, involving many lakhs of rupees and extending over a long series of years, may provoke a smile from those who have been a little behind the scenes at Simla or Calcutta since the Government migration became a matter of course. Lord Kimberley's despatch of May does not appear to have drawn any reply, so a reminder was sent by him on 21st August, 1884, which drew forth a letter fromthe Governor-General in Council, but not until the 3rd February, 1885, when Lord Dufferin had succeeded Lord Ripon as Viceroy. This letter forwards two statements, showing the expenditure incurred in 181-82 and 1882-83,. and promises similar statements for the three years previously. The hint that the information asked for need not go back too far is taken and acted upon.

The preparation of these returns with accuracy has rendered necessary a reference to the vouchers for the charges of the various years, and the preparation of returns for earlier years would involve considerable trouble and expense. We have therefore limited the preparation of statements of cost to the last five years

To let the dead past bury its dead is a philosophical as well as a poetical advice, and we have no desire toact the part of Old Mortality-although we might do so-—in bringing again to light certain frail financial records of earlier years. The accounts of the past five years seem to have met the demand which had been made nine months previously, and with these (which were only given. to the public last Friday) the taxpayers of India must rest contented. The dates of the movements of the Government of India between Calcutta and Simla from the first migration are, no doubt, accurately recorded in the Return, but this was not the information for which the soul of the taxpayer really thirsted. The longing was for an account of the expenditure, and this has only been partially gratified; but the information, so far as it goes, is to the effect that the net annual expenditure may be taken as about four and a-half lakhs in 1879-80; five and a-half in 1830-81; five in 1881-82; five and a-half in 1882-83, and five and a-quarter in 1883-84. These amounts are arrived at after a reduction from the gross amounts in the following manner:

A considerable portion of the expenditure is paid directly or indirectly, through the officers receiving travelling allowance, to the Sind, Punjab, and Delhi Railway, or to the East India Railway. A careful inquiry has shown that under the conditions on which these railways are worked about three-fourths of the amounts so paid is returned to Government, and three-fourths of the amounts paid to the Railway Companies should accordingly be deducted from the gross expenditure to arrive at the real net expenditure.

Indeed, if the revenue derived by the Railways from private traffic due to the location of the Government of India at Simla during the lot months could be calculated, and taken into account, the net expense to the State would be still further reduced, if it did not disappear altogether.

After reading this the Indian taxpayer should not only be satisfied but gratified. To show that the much-abused "Annual Migration" expenditure is an actual gain to him is a stroke of financial genius, to say nothing of financial humour.

MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

CAPTAIN V. C. TONNOCHY, 4th Sikh Infantry, and Lieutenant H. O'Donnell, 44th Bengal (Sylhet Light) Infantry, have been appointed to the command of the Punjab and Assam Police Battalions, which are now being raised for service in Burga.

Colonel Harris, Commandant of the Calcutta Volunteers, acts for Colonel Collett as Deputy Adjutant-General.

BRIGADIER-GENERAL NORMAN has been brought on the permanent staff as Brigadier, vice Brigadier General Dandridge, promoted to major-general. Brigadier-General Le Mesurier will act for General East at Saugor, while General Wilkinson returns to the Presidency on the Duke of Connaught's arrival in India to assume command of the Rawul Pindi division.

COLONEL LOCKHART left Mastuj, in Chitral, on the 7th ultimo, COLONEL LOCKHART left Mastuj, in Chitral, on the 7th ultimo, on horseback, and reached Murree, a distance of 520 miles, on the 24th. The average for each day was just over thirty miles. Four high passes (Chamarkand, Hatupir, Kamri, and Trahal), some under snow, were crossed; and many swollen streams forded or passed over by means of rope-bridges, the ponies swimming across as best they could. The colonel rode one pony the whole distance from Mastui to Gilgit thanks onward he had to trust distance from Mastuj to Gilgit; thence onward he had to trust to chance ponies picked up at villages on the route, and when these were not available a stage had to be done on foot. Three. and sometimes four, ordinary marches were done in a day; the only shelter at night was a blanket stuck up as a tente d'abri; while the only food was such as the villagers could furnish. The colonel's only companions were a Cashmeree and a Chitrali

It has been notified in Orders that the Garrison Surgeoncy of Fort William has been abolished from the 1st of August.

THE Mackenzie pattern equipment for Native Cavalry has been found unsuitable.

Colonel Cox, 15th Madras Infantry, succeeds Colonel Griffith as Brigadier-General at Bhamo.

A MEDICAL board having pronounced Colonel Cherry, commanding the 1st Madras Lancers, to be physically untit for active service, he proceeds to England. Major Hope, second in command, is proceeding in command of the regiment to Burma.

THE following officers have been appointed to the command of military posts in Burma:—Captain E. B. J. Vaughan, 6th Punjab Infantry; Captain F. M. Rundall, 9th Bengal Infantry; Lieut. H. L. Custance, 2nd Battalion 2nd Goorkhas; Lieut. S. Willcock, 2nd Battalion Gloucestershire Regiment; and Lieut. P. A. N. St. T. Wood, 98th Rembay Infantry L. Wood, 28th Bombay Infantry.

The troops ordered to return from Burma in October are:

3-1 South Irish Division Royal Artillery, which will be stationed at Jutogh; the 2nd Madras Lancers to Bangalore; and the 3rd Madras Light Infantry. The destination of the remaining regiments from Madras now in Burma will depend on the state of affairs in that province at the end of the cold season; but it is considered desirable that as many as possible should be brought back then. The troops which will return at the end of the cold weather are: 7-1 Northern Division Royal Artillery; 9-1 Cinque Ports to the Murree hills; the Hazara Mountain Battery to Abbotabad; one company Bengal Sappers to Rurki or Pindi; the Liverpool Regiment to Fyzabad; the Royal Welsh to Lucknow; the Somerset Light Infantry to Belgaum; the Hampshite Regiment to Secunderabad; the 2nd Bengal Infantry to Dinapore; the 11th Bengal Infantry to Fyzabad; the 26th Punjab Infantry to Meerut; and No. 1 Bombay Mountain Battery to Poona. It is hoped also that the 1st Bombay Lancers may be able to return to Poona at the end of the cold weather.

The long-expected Nordenfelt gun, which was subscribed for THE troops ordered to return from Burma in October are :-

THE long-expected Nordenfelt gun, which was subscribed for some months back, has arrived at Rangoon for the use of the Volunteers.

A MADRAS paper hears that certain changes in the appoint-A MADRAS paper hears that certain changes in the appointment of officers of the Adjutant-Generals Department will take place shortly. Lieutenant-Colonel Weston, Officiating Assistant Adjutant-General, Headquarters, has been ordered to proceed to Madras, to superintend the embarkation of troops ordered for Burma, and will, on completion of that duty, take up the duties of the Deputy Assistant Adjutant-General, Eastern District, from Lieutenant-Colonel Rankin, who has been directed to proceed to Octave mund to essue a charge of the office of Assistant rom Eleutenant-Colonel Rankin, who has been directed to proceed to Octacamund, to assume charge of the office of Assistant Adjutant-General. Colonel Rankin will succeed Major Hope as Deputy Adjutant-General, on that officer proceeding to join his regiment for service in Burma. Major Clerk, Deputy Assistant Adjutant-General, Belgaum District, will then take up the duties of Assistant Adjutant-General at Headquarters.

THE COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF will make four tours this cold weather. Leaving Simla on 1st October he will journey through the hills to Dharmsalla, arriving there on the 21st, and halting two days. Dalhousie will be reached on the 20th, and Bakloh on 2nd November, a halt of two days being made at each place. This will enable Sir Frederick Roberts to inspect the new battalions of the 1st and 4th Gurkhas. Delhi will be the next halting-place on 7th November, then Agra on the 10th and 11th, Lucknow the 13th and 14th, and Cawnpore on the 16th. Direct mail train will then be taken to Bombay, where the Chief will arrive on the 19th, thus ending his first tour. After a short stay in Bombay the second tour will be begun northwards again, Umballa being reached on the 23rd, and a full five days' halt will be made there, where troops will be assembled and a rifle meeting in connection with the new Bengal Presidency Rifle Association will be in progress. Journeying further north, the Chief will make halts at Jullundur, Mian Mir, Ferozepore, eventually doubling back to Dehra, which will be reached on December 11th. After two days' stay there, route will be taken to Meerut where a long stay will be made, from December 15th to the 29th, to witness the exercises of the Divisional troops. This second tour will end at Calcutta on January 1. After twendy days' rest Sir F. Roberts will leave Calcutta on January 21st on his third tour, visiting and halting at Dinapore, Benares, then be taken to Bombay, where the Chief will arrive on the 19th, days' rest Sir F. Roberts will leave Calcutta on January 21st on his third tour, visiting and halting at Dinapore, Benares, Fyzabad, Lucknow, Cawnpore and Allahabad, and thence going to Banda, Nowgong, Jhansi, Goona, Agra, Mhow, and ending the third tour at Bombay on February 27. The fourth tour will begin March 2nd and be along the north-west frontier, a halt being made at Umballa from March 5th to 12th, and another at Pindi from 14th to 21st, and a third at Peshawar from 22nd to 27th. Leaving Peshawur, the Chief will ride viâ Kolat to Bannu and Dera Ismail Khan, thence taking train by the new Sind-Sagar line to Dera Ghazi Khan, which he reaches on April 9th. Thereafter an inspection will be made of the new road through the Beri Valley to Peshin and Khwaja Amran, and the return journey undertaken viâ Quetta (April 23rd to 26th) and the Bolan. His Excellency will eventually arrive at Simla on April 30th. The four tours involve journeys amounting in all to about 10,500 miles.

At the same time, the work of the Inspector-General is to be altered and enlarged. Instead of being tied down to routine inspections, battery by battery, the greater part of his business on tour will be with batteries assembled in small camps of exer-cise, by which means it is designed to train the artillery in working together in masses, the want of practice in which came out as the weak spot of the force in the Delhi manœuvres. Colonel Minto Elliot, Deputy Adjutant-General of Artillery, will perform the duties of Inspector-General during the coming cold weather, with Major Lugard as his staff officer. Colonel Elliot intends retiring in the spring, and the new arrangement would then come permanently into force.

THE Secretary of State for India has allowed a lieutenant colonel on furlough to count as service for pension a period of one year and thirty-five days when employed on duty during furlough, but has intimated that, in future, officers going home under similar conditions, if under any of the old furlough rules, can only count any portion of their leave as pensionary service when the Government of India or the Government under which they may be serving shall, on their return from leave, make a specific recommendation to that effect.

THE Secretary of State has decided that officers who entered the army on probation as sub-lieutenants cannot reckon as service for pension any period prior to the date of their first permanent commission, and that no service out of India which was not pensionable under the rules of the British army can count for an Indian pension.

THE 3-1 South Irish Division Battery now in Burma has hitherto been borne on the Madras Establishment as a European Mountain Battery, but on return to India in October next it will be sent to Upper India. The difficulties in the way of providing mules and drivers in Madras are such as seriously to interfere with the efficiency of the battery, and hence its transfer to the Bengal Establishment.

THE Secretary of State for India thus writes regarding the Kirkee-made ammunition:—"I have perused with satisfaction the correspondence relating to the manufacture of ammunition at the Emall Arms Ammunition Factory, Kirkee. The papers have been communicated to the Secretary of State for War, who considers it very satisfactory that so high a standard in the manufacture of small-arms ammunition is reached in India." Thus ends for the present a very disagreeable episode in the history of the manufacture of small-arms ammunition in India.

THE British India Steam Navigation Company have, to a certain extent, reduced their passage fare between England and India and vice versa, but the Secretary of State for India has decided to make no change in the amount of passage allowance granted to an officer when permitted to make his own arrangements for passage from England to India and vice rersa, as it appears that the 1st class accommodation to Bombay on this Company's that the 1st class accommodation to Embay on this Company's vesels is somewhat inferior, though experience has shown that in the steamers running to Calcutta and Madras it is fully equal to the requirements of the service. It is not therefore considered advisable that passage should be ordered by vessels to or from Bombay for commissioned officers when there is an alternative route. The 2nd and 3rd class rates include the Government allowance of beer, and the Company will convey free with each passenger the Government allowance of baggage.

THE "VOICE OF INDIA."

TO THE PUBLIC OPINION OF THE PEOPLE OF

There are in England large classes willing and anxious to do justice to India, but they find it very difficult to know how to act. They complain that Indian questions are intricate; that the opinions of official experts are contradictory; and that the people of India are dumb, and do not give expression to their needs. This defect is now remedied by publishing MONTHLY (in Bombay) a magazine somewhat similar in nature to Public Opinion in England, which provides a compendium of all that is most valuable in the native journals throughout India on the leading topics of the day. The Poice of India thus gives forth a clear sound, interpreting between the rulers and the ruled, and making known the true wishes and feelings of the Indian toepole.

ing between the rulers and the ruled, and making known the true wishes and feelings of the Indian beople.

The Magazino advocates no views of its own. It seeks only to reflect with care and accuracy the views set forth in the native press. The Indian people are naturally doctle and conservative; and it will be seen that the writings thus brought before the English public are characterised by a knowledge of facts, and generally by practical good sense and moderation. No doubt grievances are from time to time being set forth; but it is a policy of prudence, no less than of justice to give these grievances a fair constitutional hearing. Accordingly, it is hoped that this nublication will be subscribed for by Members of Parliament and other public men desirous of dealing with Indian questions, and that the facts thus brought together in a convenient form will be of value to journalists and other public writers. It is specially desired to bring the Magazine before the public in Clubs, Reading-rooms, Libraries, and Institutes throughout England, with a view to promote a sustained and Intelligent interest in the welfare of our Indian Empire, comprising as it does 220 millions of our follow-subjects.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 25, 1886.

General Intelligence.

[By Overland Mail.]

The Overland Mail brings us letters and advices from Bombay to the 7th September; from Allahabad and Madras to the 5th September; and from Calcutta to the 4th September:

THE Viceroy has abandoned his intention of visiting Kurrachee during his forthcoming tour.

THE statement that the Ameer has sanctioned the construction of a railway to Kandahar is denied.

The ex-King Theebaw has petitioned the Government of India to be removed from Rutnagherry on account of the dreariness and dulness of the place.

THE Bombay Chamber of Commerce have forwarded a communication to the Finance Commission advocating, amongst other things, the reduction of the Bombay Government to a Lieutenant-Governorship, the fixing of the salaries of Covenanted Civil Servants on a lower scale, and the more extended employment of Natives in the subordinate ranks of the Civil Service.

A SEDITIOUS proclamation has been circulated in the Punjab announcing that a Russian army is at Herat, en route to India, and that the Maharajah Dhuleep Singh is accompanying it as a leader.

THE Statesman libel case has, on the application of the defendants, been postponed until the next Criminal Sessions at Calcutta.

THE application made before the Chief Justice and five other judges of the Calcutta High Court for a revision of the sentence in the Gibbons' case, was refused on Saturday, the Court holding that they had no power to revise an order made by other judges of the Court.

THERE is reason to believe that the Ameer is meditating an attack on K firistan with a view to bring that region completely under his control.

THE Tinedah has petitioned the Viceroy for leave to quit Cuttack, where he is miserable, owing to the heat and want of Buddhist places of worship. He claims to have prevented Theebaw's escape and to have served the British loyally.

THE Calcutta Town Council have unanimously accepted a proposal put forward by their chairman to assist the public in obtaining unadulterated ghee, by allowing all vendors willing to sell pure ghee to sell under the patronage of the Corporation.

It is probable that the net revenue from Indian railways will exceed that of the Budget estimate by fully fifty lakes of rupees.

THE Calcutta Branch of the Silver Association has forwarded a petition to the Government of India, bearing 3,000 signatures, in favour of bi-metallism.

Mr. Thomas Evans, a contractor, was stabled at Sibi on the night of the 25th, and died from the effects of his wounds on the following morning.

SEVERAL special meetings of the Viceroy's Conncil have been held during the last few days in connection with the defences of the North-West frontier. Anxiety is felt that even a larger expenditure than that already sanctioned will be necessitated.

It is stated that Government is considering the advisability of levying the land revenue of Bengal and Behar at gold rates.

THE Madras Chamber of Commerce has memorialised the Government of India in favour of a reimposition of the import duties.

A NEW cause of offence has been given by the Bonerwals. A raid was made by some 800 of the tribe into Euzufzai on the 23rd ultime, and a number of cattle was carried off from two villages facing the Malandri and Umbeyla passes-respectively.

A DESPATCH from the Secretary of State sanctioning the appointment of a fourth permanent judge to the Chief Court of the Punjab has arrived at Simla, but contains a stipulation to the effect that, if a Native is ever appointed to the post, he should receive only two-thirds of thenormal salary.

The Prussian Government has forwarded the official report of its two representatives at the late Delha Manceuvres to the Government of India viâ the British Ambassador at Berlin, the Foreign Office and the Secretary of State. The report is friendly, even flattering. It is also frank, and for that reason, out of a restricted professional circle, will certainly not see the light.

Notes of the Week.

The latest news from Burma is not satisfactory. A guerilla warfare is always a troublesome and difficult one for regular troops to put down, but it is not pleasant to-learn that a British force has been "sharply repulsed" in one direction and "hemmed in by the insurgents" in another. Valuable lives continue to be sacrificed, and, notwithstanding the enormous force we have in Upper Burma, there appears to be no indication of a speedy termination being put to a very inglorious campaign.

Letters from Rangoon declare that one cause of failurein the work of pacification is the paucity of European officers with the Native regiments. An instance is given of a few mounted infantry from the Hampshire regiment, under two of their own officers, being sent against a body of dacoits, against whom a detachment of Native Infantry was also sent under a Subadar. The Europeans wished to charge the enemy, but could not do so in consequence of the Native soldiery keeping up an incessant volley firing.
The Native officer was helpless, the English officers could not speak Hindustani, and so matters had to take their course until the civil officer came to the scene of action and interpreted the order to cease firing. The enemy then bolted, to re-form, of course, again elsewhere.

The Sepoy soldiers have had considerable injustice done to them by ignorant critics writing of their want of courage and their lukewarm devotion to their leaders. But it would appear that sometimes they have no leaders—at least, no leaders that they would trust. In all our battles since we first enlisted Sepoys, these men, whether belonging to the Bengal, Bombay, or the much-abused Madras Presidency, have always followed their English officers with a dash and alacrity which left nothing to be desired. When they hesitated it was under Native leaders. But in the olden days the regimental European officer knew his men and they knew him; at present officers are drafted from the Staff Corps, and there is no sympathy between them and their men. The officering of the Native regiments is a matter which requires immediate and radical reform.

It is a curious fact that in this guerilla warfare in Upper Burma, which is giving our troops such trouble, there seems to be no want of ammunition amongst the dacoits and those who have taken up arms against us. Whence comes this apparently endless supply of gunpowder and percussion caps? It cannot be that the plundering rabble have any secret arsenals or manufactories of their own; they do not draw their warlike stores from their China frontier neighbours, but hitherto they have been in no want of powder and shot. Can it be that the enterprising British trader at Rangoon or Birmingham is helping to "develop the resources of the country" by importing a dittle British industry into it? If the matter is of too trifling a nature for the consideration of the military authorities upon the spot, it might be worth the while of the local Custom-house officers to look into.

The magistrate of Bassein has given judgment in a case which will possibly be read with some interest by the "spiritual superiors" of the Rev. Mr. R. L. S. Cloquet, whom he had convicted and fined for insulting the Postmaster of that port. The story is an edifying one as stated in evidence. The rev. gentleman sent to the Postoffice on a Sunday for stamps, which were refused to him. On the Monday morning following he called upon the Postmaster to inquire why the Post-office was closed on a Sunday, and, being dissatisfied with the explanation, he called him "a d——d black nigger," and threatened to knock him down. Most people will agree with the magistrate in his opinion when giving judgment that the clerical defendant "used language stronger that would have been expected from a member of his profession," and will not think that the fine of five rupees which he imposed an excessive one. It might be interesting to know to what branch oi the Church Militant the Rev. Mr. Cloquet belongs.

THE organ of Babúdom, which from the shelter of the French settlement of Chandernagore pours forth its weekly diatribes against British rule in India, devotes a column of abuse in its latest issue to hand against Sir Fitzjames Stephen, from which the following is an elegant extract:—

He began his career of devilry as Law-Member for India by his Sedition Act, which was in truth the first famous or rather infamous Act for gagging the Native Press. By his Code of Criminal Procedure be has done more to demoralise the helpless masses of India, and spread disaster and confusion among them, than any number of arbitrary acts of ancient or modern tyrants.

It was he who by this Code converted every Magistrate into a little absolute monarch of all he surveyed with summary powers over millions of men. More miscarriages of justices are to be attributed to his abominable Code, fit only for hell, than to any other single cause, and he is the virtual godfather of all the Model Magistrates and brutal Planters. Sir James Stephen deserves to be burned in effigy in every city and village throughout India, and we doubt not that he will be represented as the Great Dasyu or demon in our future epics.

The legal gentleman vilified did not take long in India to understand the true character of the Babú patriot, and to adapt certain legal clauses in his Code to meet the aspirations of English-speaking Natives, who make a trade of sedition. The Code of Criminal Procedure does not apply to Chandernagore, but Chandernagore is exile to the Calcutta Babú, and he feels the hardship of having now to go into foreign territory in order to indulge in vituperative literature.

A CERTAIN protecting Society might be curiously interested in the perus 1 of the following advertisement, which appears in one of the Native newspapers in Bengal:—

MATRIMONIAL AGENCY.—JENSEN & CO., 9, STATION
Road, Plaistow, London, England. Established to supply Settlers in the Colonies with the addresses of respectable young women who are willing to communicate with bona fide Tradesmen, Farmers, and others desirous of meeting with useful wives.
They will be supplied from the Agricultural Districts of England, Ireland, Scotland, and Wales, as well as the Continent of Europe.
Applicants should state their particular requirements and preferences, enclosing Postal Order for Two Shillings, to meet preliminary expenses.

It may be, however, that the moral of the advertisement lies only in the two shillings to meet preliminary expenses.

Mr. ROBERT KNIGHT, of the Indian Statesman, who is well known in the East as a superior person, declares in his paper that Captain Burton's translation of the Arabian Nights has "shocked everyone who has seen it," and that "the Bishop of Bombay has succeeded in banishing it from the library table of the Arabic Society." Nobody can complain of an editor and a bishop determining for themselves what books they shall read or avoid, but the Arabic Society of Bombay must be a very docile institution to allow the right reverend gentleman to banish from their library a work which all Arabic scholars who have seen it consider one of the greatest interest and value in a literary sense. To the pure all things are pure, and, if a book is to be forbidden because it gives a faithful translation of a great original work which all the world appreciates, an expurgating bishop might find another volume that might come under the ban of banishment if all readers were as prurient-minded as some ecclesiastics.

The supply of beer to the troops in India is being made the subject of a contested question between the Home brewers and the brewers of India. After the close of the late Afghan war the Government of India gave contracts for a term of years to the latter with the result that English imported beer has been superseded in nearly all the canteens and messes by the country brewed malt liquor. As these contracts are nearing expiration some of the Home brewers desire to dispute the advantage which it is said the Government of India derives in the way of economy by patronising the local industry. It is, however, shown by a return which is in the hands of the Secretary of State that an enormous saving has been made by accepting the Indian contracts—a saving of some eleven rupees per hogshead. When it is considered that the annual consumption of malt liquor by the troops in India is about 80,000 hogsheads this saving forms no mean figure in the Budget. Reports which have been called for state also that the soldiers prefer the Indian to the home-brewed article.

THERE are (says the Englishman) many Indian friends of Colonel W. A. Roberts, R.A., who will be glad to hear that he has been appointed a district superintendent of the London Police. The post is a responsible one, but no better selection could have been made. Colonel "Ben" Roberts, of the Remount Agency, was one of the most popular men in Calcutta, and, as an able and experienced officer, his success is thoroughly deserved.

RANGOON, SEPT. 24.

Brigadier-General Cox will proceed to Bhamo to assume the command there, vice Colonel Griffiths, who, it is stated, has been superseded owing to the disastrous results of the march up the Kachyen Hil's, undertaken last May to punish the Kachyen Tsanbwa. Strong reinforcements have been sent to the Minhla district to attack Boshway. A regiment of Madras Cavalry has left for Minbu to operate against him from that point. The district round Myingyan and along the Salwen is very disturbed. A convoy was recently attacked there by some 700 insurgents. Two regiments of Native Infantry which recently arrived have been sent to Myingyan.

Captain Eyre's wise and humane policy has produced good results in the Pagan districts. An expedition will start next month to occupy the Yeu country, west of the Irrawaddy, which is in Captain Eyre's charge. The head men of the two chief places in the district have written to Captain Eyre promising to come in. When the force has arrived, it is hoped that the whole of the district will be brought under our rule without bloodshed. A body of insurgents near Popa Hill, to the south-east of Pagan, have offered to surrender to Captain Eyre, who deserves the highest credit for these results.

With the increased civil staff recently sent to Upper Burma and the large reinforcements which have arrived a marked amelioration in the condition of the country may be anticipated at an early date, if the necessary public works are promptly undertaken. (Pioneer.)

The official procedure adopted in dealing with the Crole case as a gross aggravation of the original scindals. The regulations which permit the Governments of Bombay and Madras to hold direct communication with the Secretary of State, and with him to decide matters of the first importance to India without the communication of the Suprement and Secretary of the Secretary of the Suprement and Secretary of the Secretary of Secretary of the Secretary of the Secretary of the Secretary of the Secretary of Secretary of Secretary of Secretary of the Secretary of Secretary of Secretary of the Secretary of Secretary of Secretary of Secretary of the Secretary of Secreta operation of the Supreme Government, sufficiently mischievous in themselves, have hitherto perhaps been productive of nothing more serious than serious administrative inconvenience. But it has been reserved for Sir Mountstuart Elphinstone Grant Duff and his Council to demonstrate, albeit at a terrible cost, the utter ampossibility of maintaining such a system any longer. The Governor of Madras and his advisers are at least as much on their trial in this Crole case as Mr. Crole himself. Yet they are permitted not only to sit in judgment on Mr. Crole with closed doors and to frame their indictment for a distant and doubtfully competent tribunal without any provision for an equitable hearing of the defence, but to promulgate with its verdict a verdict of their own, which, in view of all the antecedent circumstances can at the best be a hollow pretence of impartiality. To a Government that was anything but purblind and tyrannical—to a Governor who, combining the delicacy of a gentleman with the instincts of a Ruler, appreciated the narrowness of the line which in the public estimate divided the accuser from the accused—the immediate resort would of course have been an appeal to the Supreme Government to intervene. But, so far from this having been the cas, it is, if not notorious, equally true, we believe, that from first to last the Madras authorities have carefully avoided inviting any thorough inquiry from the Viceroy of India—from those whose dignified character and exalted positions would have given their judgment the stamp of unimpeachable integrity. And this, mark you, not because the Government of India, jealous of the honour of the administration and impatient of a prolonged public scandal, can have left their readiness to enter on the investigation for a moment in doubt. It is known that the Madras Government did make some reference to the Government of India on one and that the least important part of the care—the quarrel between the Board of Revenue and Mr. Crole: but the Government, as is believed, declined to pronounce officially on a mere minor issue, whilst at the same time indicating an opinion unfavourable to the action taken by Madras. And this inconvenient disclosure would seem to have been suppressed. It need hardly be added that the Supreme Convergent though receiving a copy of the Secretary of State's Government, though receiving a copy of the Secretary of State's despatch, will not, as the regulation is, be called on to take action in the matter in any shape; so that the hole-and-corner system upon which it has been dealt with from the beginning will be followed to the bitter end. And though it may be incumbent on the Madres sutherities to publish this despetch, there will be on the Madras authorities to publish this despatch, there will be no corresponding obligation to publish their own, whilst it is that despatch, above all things, which it is desirable should see the light.

Now the verdict in the Crole case in favour of Mr. Crole, as it must inevitably be, is only one and a relatively inconsiderable item in the far weightier issues with which the case is closely concerned. The inquiry must not and cannot end here. Rumours were wont to reach us whilst the story of the Madras scandals was progressing in our columns that a crop of actions for libel was progressing in our columns that a crop of actions for liber was the threatened result. Men, however, and especially journalists, do not generally start on enterprises of the sort unless forearmed with chapter and verse. There is more of the story to come. The Crole case, with its unsavoury episodes which have been dragged to the surface, is only the token of the worse that remains below. Madras officials bearing honoured names in the remains below. Mauras omeias bearing honoured hames in the administration furnish unwilling testimony to the moral decadence of that branch of the noble service to which they belong. Englishmen outside it write in sorrow and indignation of the contempt men outside it write in sorrow and indignation of the contempts with which our countrymen are coming to be criticised by their Native fellow-subjects. From unlawful trafficing in land, cozening wealthy zemindars, with a purpose, into erecting mills in districts bare of either cotton or fuel, and the sale of "screws" to Native ladies, it is only one step further, and that a short one, to practices less equivocal. In a few weeks, thank Heaven, we shall see the last of the dreaming doctrinaire and pleasant philanderer of whom Parliament, flying in the face of Providence, essayed to make a ruler of men. It must be for his successor to insist on a make a ruler of men. It must be for his successor to insist on a clean sweep of the band of obsequious incompetents who advised and beguiled him. Nor is this all that is needed. We are accustomed to regard the Indian Services as taken all in all the most high-minded zealou, and devoted body of men which ever served a Government. Therein lies the strength of our hold on the country, on the respect and loyalty of its inhabitants. Destroy this belief, and the end is not far off. These Madras scandals concern not Madras but the Empire. The time has come for the Viceroy of India, in exercise of his unquestioned prerogative extenuating nothing and sparing no man, to uphold the spotiess character of the public administration. Let him keep silence, and henceforth our cherished conception of the duties and responand henceforth our cherished conception of the duties and responsibilities of the paramount power is a stumbling block and a fraud.

FAMINE WARNINGS.

(Madras Times.)

A famine is not far off—if the periodicity to which experience points be indeed a truth. Government are making preparations to points be indeed a truth. Government are making preparations to carry food from the deltaic regions into the interior; but how long will those in the interior be able to buy? Will they not rather flock to the coast? What are the wealthy Natives doing with their money? Some are dealing directly or indirectly in brandy and skins. Why are there none to promote the formation of the great Reservoir and Canal in the Beliary district, that shall of the great Reservoir and Canal in the Bellary district, that shall prove one of the wonders of the world, and save a whole district, as well as develop Native engineering talent, and furnish employment and food (during the work as well as after it) to myriads of poor ryots? While the Government are trying to improve facilities for throwing food into the district, will not the wealthy Natives of the country engage in the more congenial and thoroughly Indian occupation of storing water and increasing the production of food? It might be made a national and patriotic work.

The real reason, we fear, why Natives will not put their hands to work of this kind is that they distrust one another, as well as Europeans. If European charlatans and swindlers would learn Sanskrit and a little metallurgy, chemistry and Indian astrology, they might tap the wealth of more than one Native—aye, even of Natives who have received the higher education—by pretending to transmute baser metals into gold according to the Sanstras, or according to some ancient Hindu method. But it is different with Engineering and such like matters. These require intelligent according to some ancient findumetrod. But it is different with Engineering and such like matters. These require intelligent faith; the others credulity. These appeal to temperate desires and wishes by offering moderate profits to those who will patiently wait for them. Those profess to gratify the avarice of greedy men who would make haste to be rich. We read and the armich. men who would make haste to be rich. We read and hear much of the high intelligence, and statesmanship, and the various mental attainments and gitts of Natives; and of the wickedness of Government in not employing these to a larger extent and to the greater exclusion of foreigners, that is, Europeans. Why should not the statesmen, capitalists and engineers of India combine to institute great industries, and to start great productive works in India? Why will not wealthy Indians themselves employ talented Indians in developing the resources of the country?

> SIR GRANT DUFF. (Indian Planters' Gazette.)

The time draws near for the departure of his Excellency Sir M. E. Grant Duff from the Madras Presidency, and the brother of Lord Mayo will soon reign in his stead. There can be little doubt that his Excellency will leave the shores of India with a reputation less brilliant and substantial than that with which he took up office as Governor of Madras. A rine scholar a cultured took up office as Governor of Madras. A ripe scholar, a cultured gentleman, a clear-headed politician, a fluent speaker, a ready and effective debater, his Indian career has exhibited that as an administrator he has been a marked failure; and he will return to England, with all his brilliant capacities, a distinct failure as Governor of Madras. In some respects this is not to be wondered at. The special qualities that go to form an administrator of the first rank are totally different from those which constitute a scholar, a man of wide and varied culture, or a powerful orator. Knowledge of man is essential to an administrator, a wide and comprehensive grip of the whole conditions surrounding a question, the character of the varied populace he has to deal with, and a due estimation of the value of the men on whom he must depend in a large measure for advice and for facts;—these are essential if an administrator is to be successful, if he is to be saved from disaster or preserved from folly. The man who could vear by year place before his constituents a clear and full statement of the political aspect of the session and the condition of man in Europe, and who could charm by his eloquence and his egotism wide circles of his countrymen, found himself surrounded by new conditions in Madras. According to his own statement the Press was so wretched that he did not waste time in reading it. The Council was a tame affair, which met to register foregone conclusions. Public opinion was scarcely existent, and an audience fit, even thrugh few, in presence of whom his Excellency might spread the witchery of his charmed tongue not always available. The first year of his incumbency Sir Grant Duff made a gubernatorial progress through the Presidency, seeing everything as much as possible with his own eyes, receiving deputations and firing off brilliant little speeches all over the Presidency. Then came a pause, during which the Press of Madras opened its mouth on the extravagance and futility of the Hill Exodus, the Salem Riots and the scandals which they produced, the Wallace episode, and last of all the Garstiu-Crole case, one of the most remarkable narratives of official intromissions which has been made public in recent years. In all of these emergencies his Excellency does not appear to have been able to rise above the mediocrity of an averag

CIVILIAN AND BARRISTER JUDGES. (Bombay Gazette.)

Apart from any substantive causes that there may be for dis-satisfaction with the Civilian Judges, the public have been led— unconsciously perhaps—by incidental disqualifications and dis-tinctions that are to be found in the Act and in its working to assign an essentially superior rank to the Barrister Judge, and an essentially inferior rank to judges chosen from the three other categories to which promotion to the Bench is open. The public appreciation of an order or a profession is usually influenced out of all proportion with any real inferiority which it may derive from the disabilities which law or authority may impose upon it. The conclusion to which the Chamber of Commerce has come, that the experiment of Civilian Judges sitting on the Original that the experiment of Civilian Judges sitting on the Original Side of the High Court has not proved a success, should be read in the light of that general principle, and so read it will seem to need acceptance, if accepted at all, with certain reservations. The Civilian Judges themselves have contributed something to the disadvantages under which they have lain. With some conspicuous exceptions they have been reluctant to show themselves on the Original Side, partly through the consciousness that its practice was not familiar to them, but in a greater degree we suspect because of the consciousness that a fashion had set in of thinking because of the consciousness that a fashion had set in of thinking that it is in the fitness of things that they should not show themselves any oftener than is strictly necessary, except on the Appellate Side. We cannot all struggle against the predetermined verdict that our neighbours may have passed upon us, and if there have been Civilians who have shrunk from proving that the Bar, and the public opinion which the Bar has done not a little to influence upon this subject, are wrong, that is no reason why we should let judgment upon them go by default. And those of the Civilian Judges who in recent years have had anything like large opportunities of work on the Original Side have certainly done nothing to confirm the conventional notion as to the unfitness of their order for disposing of work other than that which experience in the Mofussil has made them familiar with. They suffer under practical disadvantages, it is true, but of what class of postulants to the Bench could not this be said? The Barrister Judge newly arrived from an English Circuit probably suffers under greater. His want of knowledge of the languages of the country—and from this the judge chosen from the local Bar would in most cases anything in a country and of the Bar would in most cases suffer in an equal degreecustoms of the people, and his inability to weigh evidence except in scales made for use in England, must tell much against him. Let the Barrister Judge, with his superior knowledge of the practical working of a suit and his inferior knowledge of the local conditions which surround the administration of the law in India, start at the same time as his civilian brother, and, their personal capacity being about equal, there will not at the end of six months be a striking difference between the fitness of the two for their new work. There is undoubtedly a very prevalent and a natural desire that the High Court should be strong, on its Original Side, in capacity for dealing with mercantile cases. But with every respect for this desire, we can scarcely find in it a justification for effecting a change in the Court which cannot be regarded as other than of a constitutional character. The highest estimate that we have yet heard puts the proportion of purely mercantile cases that come before the Court at 20 per cent.; others put it at not half that per centage. In either case, it is clear that the failure of the experiment inaugurated by the Act of 1862 must not be inferred from its working in relation to one particular class of litigation.

THE CROLE CASE. (Madras Mail.)

The disinclination of Lord Kimberley to grant Mr. Crole the redress that he claimed has not affected the local public verdict that Mr. Crole has been treated with undue severity by the Madras Government. Mr. Sullivan did not deserve the hard things said or implied of him; but he was placed in a false position by his son, and the Government of which he is a member, which condoned his error of judgment, should, it is held, have exercised leniency in its treatment of his accused. Mr. Sullivan's record had been unblemished up to the date when Mr. Crole appeared on the scene as the champion of official integrity, and he could have well afforded to have regarded his censor with the calmness resulting from conscious rectitude. It was absurd of the Government to view Mr. Crole's aspersions through a powerful magnifying glass, and thereupon to make a martyr of him. Mr. Crole had reprobated "what appears to me to be flagrant breaches of the Civil Service Covenant, which have of late years been becoming more and more an open scandal." He considered, furthermore, that if "one-tenth part of what one hears in ordinary conversation, from persons apparently well-informed, be correct regarding land-owning and land-jobbing transactions be true, and were to come out before a Gommission, the fate of the Civil Service in its present form is sealed." It is probable that Mr. Crole was seriously misled; but his opinions were reduced to writing in obedience to the order of the Governor, and were therefore to a great extent privileged. He expressed them without malice, and in good faith, not in his private, but in his official capacity, and irrespective of the fact that they were scarcely likely to make him a persona grata with his brethren of the Civil Service.

his brethren of the Civil Service.

A good deal more sympathy would have been felt for Mr. Orole than has been the case had it not been for the lamentably ill-judged advocacy of his case by the Madras correspondent of the Pioneer. How that usually well-conducted journal, with its strong official affinities, could have allowed no less than thirty of its columns to be devoted to the vituperation of numerous Madras officials, in the interest of Mr. Crole, is beyond our power of explanation.

UNFORTUNATE BENGAL

(Bengal Times.)

Worse than the misfortune of having no history is perhaps that of having one that taxes its resources in vain to record success. We read in a Native-edited paper that, for fifteen years-past, every Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal has been a failure—Sir George Campbell, Sir Ashley Eden, Sir Rivers Thomps n have all, according to the Native editor, failed in the high office they have been called upon to fill, although all have been men of ability, Sir Ashley Eden exceptionally so, and of remarkable strength of will. Our Native contemporary is good enough to refrain from entering upon a detail of failure. He spareshis English readers' blushes; he mercifully withholds from the world's censure delinquencies time has almost condoned, and that calm temper of resigned, philosophical discipline, common to the mild Hindoo, relegates to oblivion. There is something very noble in all this, something like the voice of nature that appeals to heart and sympathy, rather than to judgment and logical deduction. Past Lieutenant-Governors have proved themselves failures, says this tribune of the people, but, poor idiots, let me not crush them into utter insignificance, let me not grind them to powder for sins that have perished; rather let charity cast a veil over their shortcomings, and spare my modesty an enforced avowal of my own greatness of soul-Envious mediocrity may stand sullenly by in retaliatory silence, resenting the absence of gifts Nature has denied its proprietors. Not a soul of these little great men will condescend to sound the trumpet of my just praise; hence I must do so myself—not by personal adulation, but by detracting from others' merits—and so, this self-appointed trumpeter, who in a general way has been shaking the foundation of our Indian Empire for a few years pass, as he solemnly said he would, when seized and conveyed to country quarters at the public cost, amuse himself by a system of casting dirt in such thick and constant projection that he is sure some of it at least must defile his victim. Whether in happen to differ from him upon generally accepted principles among Native writers of the whole duty of man, Baboo Surrender Not is equally happy and equally at home. He tells us that every member of the Civil Service is necessarily a routinist, influenced by the iron-bound traditions of his service, and that blinded by local prejudice, he is unable to perceive the signs of the times—for instance, a general shaking of our Indian Empire to its foundation by an enthusiative patriot who mistakes abuse for criticism pretty often; and being, moreover, confined to a groove he is unable to extricate himself from his shackles at the sall of appearing statesmanship—for example, leading (I) articles in grove he is unable to extricate himself from his shackles at the call of superior statesmanship—for example, leading (?) articles in the Bengalee, which, in a feeble sort of style, not altogether without some cunning and skill, endeavour to sacrifice everything a minute old and an inch high, supposing it to be European, or in symmetry with European thought and principle. Thus, no spirit of reform dwells within a member of that celebrated service, and of reform dwells within a member of that celebrated service, and rather than take a single step out of his groove of apathy, he would shut his eyes to the great social and moral influences which English civilising rule has called for among the people. This is an error into which our unhappy and ill-starred Lieutenant-Governors have fallen, and having omitted to associate conservatism with a spirit of progress, as every Government should do that affects to appreciate public criticism fallen of its acts, they have, in a natural sequence of reprobation, fallen under our contemporary's stinging lash—a lash so formidable as to east into the shade even Rehoboam's scorpions. In circumstances so depressing Sir Steuart Bayley will have time to realise, in his own person, how true it is that "uneasy lies the head that wears a crown"; even though in arriving at such an experience he will have to wade through a calamitous process of literary he will have to wade through a calamitous process of literary scourging, which, while reminding him of the sweet uses of adversity, will not fail to open his understanding to the right uses of giver, a proper application of supplies to promoting Native youth to offices of trust and emolument, a discreet husbanding of public funds, so as to meet deficiencies caused by thom, a habit of forgetfulness in Native subordinates, &c. Sir Steuart has much to learn, and if he prove an inapt student he may become practically acquainted with the power of the pen—that mighty instrument of little men. Such, at least, is the dismal fate in reserve for him from April, 1887, and to that time he must be looking forward as to a day of retribution for just offences.

WHAT HE HAS AND WHAT HE WANTS.

A remarkable letter on Indian social reform and the attitude of the people themselves towards the movement is contributed to the Indian Spectator by a correspondent signing himself "A." He writes :-

"There is a ring of true manliness in the 'full thirteen years' on which the enlightened ruler of Baroda insists as the lower on which the enightened ruler of Baroda insists as the lowest age for a Hindu wife; and the fact that he would, if he could, fix the age still higher does not lessen our appreciation of his manliness. This view, coming from such a quarter, will, let us hope, not fail of its effect, the more so, as rising superior to the traditional sensuality of Native Courts, this robust young ruler has practised in his own case what he has preached to others. He is one of the very few Native Princes who have abjured polygamy. May he have a wide following!

"Anent the alleged apathy of the community which you have already to some extent disproved, let me urge that the genuine Hindu, distinguished from the frothy exponent of inordinate political aspirations with which Englishmen in power mostly come in covered is required retirent and here a constitutional come in contact, is peculiarly reticent, and has a constitutional aversion to revolutionary ardour. His strength is thought, not impulse; reverence, not innovation; peace, not disturbance. But thought, reverence, and peace may be allowed to have capabilities no less real, if less immediate than impulse, and one feels warranted in thinking that the representatives of the community are even at the present moment bestirring themselves in the various centres of intelligence, but on lines more consonant to their peculiar temperament and habits than on those on which the more impetuous Western mind is apt to proceed. What is now wanted is an organised and visible expression of what is going on under the surface, if for nothing else, for the encouragement of the masses.

"The cause of the seeming apathy lies still deeper down in a Hindu's nature. It may well be that the argument in favour of reform based upon misery is lost upon those to whom birth and life are but a state of probation and illusion, and happiness and reality lie beyond the grave. Englishmen, and for that matter all oursiders, can accarcely form an idea of the ingrained speculative nature of a Hindu. He has thought, and he can speak on the issues of lite and death in a way of which the Western mind, issues of life and death in a way of which the Western mind, class for class and man for man, is incapable. His pursuit of worldly good, however keen it may be, is nevertheless overshadowed by the consciousness, always avowed, of its fleeting and unreal nature. Of the stringth of this conviction we have been recently afforded an opportunity of judging, when we have seen a man full of secular honours and in the full possession of his faculties deliberately laying down the former and effacing his secular self for that higherself which he believes to be his in future. It is this which partly explains how and why it is that while the Hindu has from time partly explains how and why it is that, while the Hinduhas from time immemorial sounded the depths of purely speculative philosophy and arts, he has held in almost contemptuous disregard what a and arts, he has held in almost contemptuous disregard what the rest of mankind have in all ages of the world regarded with pride, namely, the preservation of a record of their secular achievements; in other words, their history. The Hindu has a literature rich in the departments of metaphysical philosopy, logic, rhetoric, poetry, music, &c. But the one thing absent therefrom is the one thing present in all other literatures, namely, a history of the nation. Persia has had its Firdusi and those from whom he obtained his materials, Greece its Herodotus and Thucydides, Rome its Livy and Tacitus, and all the modern progressive countries have had their historians without number. India alone has none and never hed any. Indeed, it never ared to have any, so has none and never had any. Indeed, it never cared to have any, so little has it felt interested in merely temporal affairs. This feeling, so inexplicable to outsiders, is to this day an important factor in the lite of an orthodox Hindu. The now and the present must be raised over the hereafter to a much more conspicuous degree in his estimation than at present before he will exhibit anything like the ardour for reform which distinguishes the Western mind. This is obviously the duty of our English-educated Hindu friends. Let us hope that England, in the various influences which she is bringing to hear the content will exhibit any inbringing to bear upon the country will achieve such a result in time. The political aspir tions to which the Hindu mind has awakened, even though they be inordinate, as sometimes alleged, may themselves be welcome as tending to wean it from the future to the living present. The tendency of speculation as to the ultimate issues of lite and death to weaken the energy of action is well known, and will be allowed by those who followed the late literary discussion in England on the question which startled Englishmen themselves as proceeding from one of their own gifted countrymen, 'Is life worth living?'"

THE adjutant birds, which are one of the most familiar sightsin Calcutta, are said to be deserting the city. A Calcutta con-temporary states that very few of the birds are seen new, and suggests that the reason is to be sought in the fact that the city has become such a sanitarium that the birds find their occupation gene, and have migrated to Simla.

THE ghee question continues to agitate the public mind in alcutta. The local Town Council, at its last meeting, discussed Calcutta. The local Town Council, at its last meeting, discussed a suggestion made by the chairman regarding the sale of unadulterated chee. As a long time neuterapse before any assistance can be obtained by way of new legislation, he proposed to allow all vendors, who are willing to guarantee their ghee to be pure, to reli under the patronage of the Municipa ity, and to notify the fact by a board over their doors. To obtain permission to put up this board the vendor would be required to sign a contract, under a penalty of Rr. 500, that he would sell only pure ghee. To-secure conformity to the contract, an inspector should be appointed to visit these shops continually, and obtain samples of pointed to visit these shops continually, and obtain samples of ghee for analysis, and any vendor found selling adulterated ghee would be required to pay the stipulated penalty. After some discussion the proposal was unanimously approved of. It will. now be for the public to make this arrangement effectual by refusing to purchase ghee except at shops selling under the patronage of the Municipality.

THE Englishman understands that an eminent London firm, which recently applied to the India Office for permission to tender for the construction of a submarine cable between Calcuttantees. and Rangoon, was informed by the late Secretary of State "that the present land lines are amply sufficient." The Calcutta paper adds:—"It will scarcely be credited by the public that the only telegraph route between British India and Burma is vid Dakka and Chittagong, traversing a region of broad rivers, and exposed to climatic disturbances on a vast scale. Nor is this all. The wires run for several hundred miles through a terminatory but partially civilised, and in the immediate vicinity of savage aboriginal tribes. A land line, even under favourable conditions, is exposed to innumerable dangers from which its deep sea congeners is exempt. A conflagration, for instance, is fatal to its continuity; and only last year communications were wholly interrupted during the Viceroy's visit to Mandalay by a trivial fire in one of the countless bazaars of thatched huts over which the line is carried. The importance of Burma has been greatly advanced by our recent annexations, and the ludia Office. would do well to reconsider its determination to rest content with the primitive telegraphic facilities which are now provided."

A most boisterous and unruly mass meeting of the various sections of the Hindoo community was held recently at Mahadev Baug for the purpose of adopting a memorial to the Governor-General in Council protesting against the proposed legislative interference in connection with infant marriages in the community. The memorial, which was declared to have been adopted by a majority by the Hon. Rao Saheb V. N. Mandlick, C.S.I., who presided at the meeting, among other things stated that the memorialists hoped his Excellency in Council would not depart from the well-established and wise principle of non interference with the religious and social customs of the Hindoos, and assist by legislation a movement which could only be properly and naturally developed by the spontaneous action of influence working within the community itself.

PUNJAB.

IT is rumoured at Lihore that Mr. Baden Powell will succeed Colonel Davies as Financial Commissioner of the Punjab.

Should the contemplated punitive expedition against the Bonerwals be carried out this autumn, it is to be hoped, the Lahore paper remarks, that every precaution will be taken to prevent, if possible, such an extensive coalition of the Independent hill tribes, as brought us to grief in the unfortunate Umbeyla business in 1863. History tells us, too, that the Mogul Emperor Akbar lost a large army with his General, Beerbul, in the same locality. A large force and specially picked and equipped troops will be needed in order to ensure success.

A CONTEMPORARY'S Mussoorie correspondent states that the account recently published concerning the late difficulty at the Himalaya Club was scarcely correct and is likely to mislaad. The true account of what occurred the correspondent gives at follow:

—It somehow or other came to the cars of the General commanding the division that some high plying was going on at the Himalaya Club, and that some subalterns were concerned in the Himalaya Club, and that some subalterns were concerned in the Hist Book at the club and report; the result being that it was determined that two officers should rejoin their regiments. But the officers in question, being already under orders, left Mussoorie before these orders from the General reached them. I should have stated before that the General and his staff officer are both members of the club. Various rumours were circulated through the station, and the managing committee asked the staff officer for an explanation of his conduct. After some time, however, the General informed the committee that what had been done was done by his orders, and that being a member of the Club himself he considered he had a right to inspect the Whist Book, which lay on a table in one of the public rooms; but at the same time he expressed a regret if he had unintentionally given offence. This ended the whole matter, which has since then been buried in oblivion. "Least said, soonest mended;" so let us to other subjects.

A VERNACULAR notice or proclamation, professing to be anony mous, is, the Lahore paper states, in circulation in the Punjab, calling upon the Natives of the province to combine together (sinking minor differences meanwhile) to throw off the hated yoke of the Feringhee "tyrants." The document announces the arrival of the large Russian army at Herat en route to India; declares that the Maharaj Dhuleep Singh has joined and is accompanying it as a leader; that the Ameer of Cabul has replied to the British call for help, that he is personally ready and willing to render it, but that his people are unanimously hostile to the British alliance! The notice finally aunounces that a collision between the British and Russian forces on the borders of India is imminent, and professes to point out the benefits which will accrue to those who join the "Maharaja and the Russian forces." The document, our contemporary says, may be a fraud and a forgery; but it is a significant warning and expression of Native popular feeling by which the Government may well profit in time. We can afford to contemptuously laugh at the empty raving and verbosity, and sham agitation of the Bengali Babus; but anything calculated to rouse the national hostility and patriotic spirit of the martial races of the Punjab and North-West Provinces demands the matter to those who are responsible for the good government of the country and safety of the State.

The news reached Lahore on Thursday from Sibi in Sind, of the murder of Mr. T. Evans, late an inspector of police at Miam Mir. During the past two years Mr. Evans has been carrying on work as a contractor, and left Lahore on Sunday morning last for Sibi, where he had some legal business to transact. On Thursday morning Mrs. Evans received a telegram, stating that her husband had been stabbed. Another telegram, the same day, stated that Mr. Evans died a few hours after the occurrence. The news has been a shock to many, because Mr. Evans had been very popular in Lahore and Mian Mir.

It would appear that last year Mr. Evans in his business at Labore had been engaged in some contract work in the direction of Harnai, and that, when leaving that part he failed to settle accounts with some of his employés. Amongst these was a Punjabi Mahomedan, who entered a suit against Mr. Evans in the Assistant Magistrate's Court for a sum of Rt. 1,100. The case came off on the 25th ultimo, and a decree was given in favour of Mr. Evans. Mr. Evans left the Court, and had only gone a few paces, when the plaintiff came up and made a gracious saliam to Mr. Evans, requesting him to pay him half his claim. Mr. Evans refused, and replied that he would not pay him anything, as the decree was given in his favour. The plaintiff still pleading his cause and entreating Mr. Evans to have pity on him, managed to get Mr. Evans off his guard, and plunged a long dagger into his stomach, lipping him open and making a fea ful gash, almost disembowelling him. The man was at once arrested, and Mr. Evans was conveyed to the Dâk bungalow, where he expired on the morning of Thursday last at three o'clock, having been in the greatest agony for close upon eight hours.

NORTH-WEST PROVINCES.

The records of the Punjab trade for last year show an unex pected falling-off in the trade with Kurrachee, which was supposed to have established its claim to be considered the chief port of entry for the northern province. While the Kurrachee trade decreased, however, the trade with Bombay and Calcutta improved. Possibly the necessity for improved landing and shipping facilities at Kurrachee has had some influence on the trade, which may be expected to revive when the alterations and extensions now sanctioned and provided for shall have been carried out.

As an attempt has been made to cast doubt upon our version of the circumstances, we may repeat, says the Englishman, that the Punjab Government was not consulted about the transfer of the Frontier Force to the Commander-in-Chief, and that the first intelligence it received of the transfer came in a communication from the Government of India forwarding an extract from the Secretary of State's despatch sanctioning the measure. The Lieutenant-Governor protested against the way in which he had been treated, pointing out to the Government of India that had he been consulted he would have taken the opportunity to add his advocacy to that of his predecessors against the transfer. As it was, the Lieutenant-Governor, yielding to force majeure on the main point, determined to minimise as far as possible, in matters of detail, the evils which he feared would result from the measure. intelligence it received of the transfer came in a communication measure.

NATIVE PRESS.

A NATIVE LAW MEMBER.

The demand of a section of the Bengal Press that a Native successor should be chosen to Mr. Ilbert has been answered by one of themselves, Reis and Rayyet, in an article which is quoted

"The Indian Mirror and the Bengalee have started a bold suggestion. They urge that, on Mr. Ilbert's retiring to take up the office of Assis ant Parliamentary Counsel under the new Cabinet, the Legal Membership of the Council of the Governor-General should be conferred on some eminent Indian lawyer. Our contemporaries have scarcely stated the grounds which, in their opinion, would justify such a great departure. They have contented themselves with giving a list of names of Native High Court Judges, and barristers and plenders of extensive success as practitioners, in the several Presidencies, the very mention of those names being apparently deemed sufficient to establish the justice practitioners, in the several Presidencies, the very mention of those names being apparently deemed sufficient to establish the justice of what they propose. . . . A question of this nature is not to be disposed of so summarily. One would surely expect an elaborate argument as essential for the justification of such an important innovation. We do not know how the suggestion is viewed by our countrymen in general. But it should be repudiated at once as being too silly and premature. It is no doubt one eminently calculated to take the fancy; and the present time, when sentimental fervour passes for patriotism and when questions of financial reform and of the greater infusion of the administration with the Native element have engrossed earnest public attention, may give any such proposition the chance of a too easy acceptance. It is thus, perhaps, that we find that the Indian Echo, which has always a keen eye for the humours in all discussions, and the usually moderate and staid Liberal have not had the heart to combat what, no doubt, is a very pleasant notion. It gives us much pain to appear any way and in the least hostile to any national aspirations, but we think we do lasting injury to ourselves, and put off the chance of realisation of ing injury to ourselves, and put off the chance of realisation of any just aspirations by setting up extravagant pretensions, and continually stretching the hand forward for prizes immeasurably

"Now, in this matter of Mr. Ilbert's successor, we ask: Have the Native lawyers, whom the Mirror and the Bengalee have officiously taken under their protecting wings, themselves any the most distant aspirations for filling up the Legal Membership? They are good men and true, each in this way whose prosperity to the very height of their desires will only gratify us, as such prosperity cannot fail to be of advantage to the country. Against their merits and qualifications as judges or advocates we may have nothing to say. But is a good judge or a successful advocate necessarily qualified for the position of legal councillor to a Government constituted like the Government of India? That Government is an alien despotism of great power and boundless resources; working among a multitudinous population divided both among themselves and from the ruling race by a diversity of conflicting interests. The duties of a legal adviser of such a Government, placed, from the very nature of the case, under constant temptations to the exercise of unrestrained power—the tact, delicacy, personal influence and character, not to speak of extensive delicacy, personal influence and character, not to speak of extensive and sound lore, profound knowledge of law in all its branches and in different countries, and of jurisprudence and ethics required for their proper discharge—those duties, and the way they are performed, are hardly understood by the outside people, far less appreciated. They are necessarily unknown to the public view. But these unseen services, for aught we know, and on especial occasions, constitute the most valuable services of a Legal occasions, constitute the most valuable services of a Legal Member—more, that is, than the drafting of laws and the speeches in the Legislative Council, or other ex-officio duties in connection with the University, for instance, or other general matters—grave and difficult and beyond the range of ordinary matters—grave and difficult and beyond the range of ordinary capacity as these also are.

Indeed, if the duties of Legal Member were, instead of being, as we conceive them to be, of high and recondite character, easy of performance by any one among the several Indian gentlemen who have been spoken of, there would then scarcely be any occasion for the retention of the office itself. If any of these Native lawyers could discharge them, they could be discharged as well by the very ab!e Secretaries by whom the Government of India is always assisted. In fact, the office would then lose its raison d'être.

"or the rest, the demand for a Native successor to Mr. Ilbert

sounds only as the prelude to the general break-up. It would seem as if England's mission in the East were fulfilled, and that we might now shift for ourselves. Lal Mohans and Naorojees we might now shift for ourselves. Lal Mohans and Naorojees need no longer canvas fastidious English constituencies, for India must have her own Parliament. The demand for enrolment in the army and navy has already been made. Rickety Baboolings are indignant with the Vicercy for not humouring them in the desire to sport Volunteer uniforms and to try to shoulder the regulation musket. Similar demands are by-and-by to be urged for Native Commanders-in-Chief or Vicercys. The way in vogue among a section of our people is very foolish, and we should disavow all sympathy with such mischievous twaddle."

BURMA IN PARLIAMENT.—The Rast Goftar, commenting uponthe recent discussion in Parliament about the war expenses in. Burma, says that the Conservative Government appears to treat. India with supreme contempt. Let men so well known as Mr.. Dadabhai Naoroji and Mr. l'heroshaw M. Mehta say what they will that the interests of India are more safe in the hands of the Liberal than the Conservative Ministry, but events hitherto-have undeniably proved that, as far as India and its interests-are concerned, both the Whigs and the Tories may be said to be six of one and half-a-dozen of the other. The best instance of the iniquity of both these Governments is afforded in the present. Burmese war, in which one government most unceremoniously, deprived the Burmese King of his dominion, and the other has thought fit to shift the burden of war expenses on to the shoulders of the people of India.

of the people of India.

THE GOVERNMENT AND THE NATIVES.—The Dhaka Prokash says:—The Government is draining away the wealth of this country to its own. India is gradually becoming impoverished. Owing to the Arms' Act, the people are unable to defend themselves. If the Government is attacked, it will not receive the assistance of the 250 million inhabitants of India. The Russians on the one hand, and the French on the other, are rapidly advancing. The English have so much harassed the people that, if they find the English in a critical position, they may turn hostile. At this moment, if any powerful enemy makes his appearance, the Government will seriously suffer.

Pearance, the Government will seriously suffer.

THE THAROBE OF GONDAL IN ENGLAND.—What is the Thakore of Gondal doing in England? Nothing is said about his return. It is stated that he has gone on a second visit to England for the study of medicine. If the report be true we cannot approve of the Thakore's choice. It is not the right thing, nor does it benefit his people for a chief to go to England for the study of medicine soon after his accession to the gadee. If he wants a medical man for himself or his subjects he can always get one by the payment of a reasonable salary. We are not opposed to a chief acquiring knowledge, but it is not necessary for him to go to England when he can acquire the same knowledge here. Does Bhagwatsingjee want to be a raja or a doctor? If he is after feeling the pulse of his patients he will lose the political touch of his people. If he wanted to be a doctor he ought not to have taken charge of the gadee. As things are at present he appears to have morally abdicated.—Rast Goftar.

High Court Reform.—The Bombay Samachar thinks that the rather animated discussion between the Bombay Bar and Government on the subject of High Court reform will be reduced to its normal condition now that the former has had its last say in the matter. The Bombay Bar have upheld their dignity and have consulted their best interest, when they refer the public to arbitrate upon the points of difference between them and the Government But this upportunitely also not the points of the control of the But this unfortunately does not bring an end to certain ment. But this unfortunately does not bring an end to certain practices, entailing dilatoriness obtaining among the members of the Bar. The Jame Jamshed does not approve of the argument advanced by the Bombay Chamber of Commerce when they say that Civilian Judges, with honourable exceptions, were not capable of conducting their duties with so great an ability as barrister judges, who were well versed in the intricate problems of commercial transactions. The civilian judges, the paper says, were, as a class, better able to dispense justice in consequence of their coming frequently in contact with the consequence of their coming frequently in contact with the Natives, whose habits and manners and customs they were so well acquainted with. Civilian judges were not in any ways inferior to barrister judges. In fact, it was much more difficult to pass the Civil Service examination than to become a barristerat-law. It is not, therefore, desirable that the bench on the Original Side of the High Court should be monopolised by barrister judges.

CHEAP DINNERS.—In these hard times, when there is general. complaint about the depression of trade and the consequent. curtailment of incomes, the experiment inaugurated by the-British Dinner Company (Limited) to supply a wholesome,. nutritious, and substantial, well-cooked dinner for sixpence-ought to be welcomed by all parties interested in the economical question. The patronage which the Company is sure to receive ought also to ensure a great financial success for the shareholders. A similar company in Scotland already returns 25 percent. profit.

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

THE SACRED KURRAL OF TIRUVALLUVA-NAYANAR.*

Of all the melifluous works in the most mellifluous language of the East the "Kurral" stands supremely first, alike as regards the sweetness of its diction and the purity of its sentiments. To quote the words of a great French savant, "That which alone is wonderful in the Kurral is the fact that its author addresses himself, without regard to castes, peoples, or beliefs, to the whole community of mankind; the fact that he formulates sovereign morality and absolute reason; that he proclaims in their very essence, in their eternal abstractedness, virtue, and truth; that he presents, as it were, in the group the highest laws of domestic and social life; that he is equally perfect in thought, in language, and in poetry, in the austere metaphysical contemplation of the great mysteries of the Divine Nature as in the easy and graceful anylysis of the tenderest emotions of the heart."

great mysteries of the Divine Nature as in the easy and graceful anylysis of the tenderest emotions of the heart."

Yet, by a strange destiny, "the poet and his one great work are both without a name." The author is commonly known as Tiruvalluva-Nâyanâr, a term indicating that he was the sacred devotee, priest, or soothsayer of the Tarraya caste. But who was he? Tradition says he was a weaver of the pariah tribe, and, as such, of course possessing an origin "most degrading and contemptible to the eyes of the vast multitudes of whom he has been for ten centuries the oracle." Equally obscure is the period when he flourished—the probable date is between AD. 800 and A.D. 1,000. All that is known for certain is "that he was a pariah and a weaver, lived at S. Thome or Mayilapur, now a suburb of Madras, and had an intimate friend, probably a patron, called Elela-cinkan (lion of the surf), who was the captain of a small vessel." Such is fame.

vessel." Such is fame.

When the sacred "Kurral" was finished, tradition says that atts author took the precious work to Madura and presented it to a college of learned Tamil scholars; but the high caste assembly, so the story goes, "would not permit him to take his seat on the bench with the learned pandits, on account of his want of caste. Meekly acquescing in his own seclusion, he simply requested permission to lay his book on the end of the seat."

permission to lay his book on the end of the seat."

This is the work to the study of which Dr. Pope has devoted we believe upwards of forty gears of his life. The result is the volume which, thanks to liberal assistance on the part of the Secretary of State for India in Council, Messrs. Allen have recently presented to the world. The primary object of this publication is to render the study of classical Tamil more easy and pleasant to English students, but it is also designed to afford Native scholars a clear and comprehensive insight into the nature and scope of an author whose one work—for fame does not assign any further composition to the weaver's pen—touches so many topics with poetic grace—an author who is venerated by upwards of ten millions of the races of Southern India as a sage and law-giver to his people. It is a proud distinction for Dr. Pope that it should have been reserved for him to remove from his favourite author the mistaken glo ses and impure commentaries which corrupt the teachings of the "Kurral," and encrust with a layer of lust moral sentiments and noble dictates calculated to purify the sources of life's perennial spring, and create a spirit of healthful sectitude and propriety of action.

It is scarcely within the province of a reviewer to enter upon a critical examination of the work from a scholarly point of view. At best to do so would be but a display of the writer's own ignorance, for Dr. Pope, as a Tamil scholar, stands second to mone. He is, as it were, a "Kurral" amongst Dravidian savants. To tay, therefore, that his translation is accurate, that his notes are clear and learned, that he has expended an enormous amount of care in the preparation of the present translation, is to say that nothing could be better than it, nothing more fitting his own reputation, nothing more worthy of that patronage of Government which, none too frequently bestowed, cannot be too judiciously exercised.

INCIDENTS OF INDIAN LIFE+

In this little volume, Mr. Cave-Browne dedicates to his parishioners and neighbours, on the occasion of a second "Village Industrial Exhibition," narrations of many stirring scenes in adian history, in some of which he took part. We have an account of the important events at Nagpoor in 1817-18, terminating in the escape from British custody of the debauched young Rajah, Appa Sahil, and in his disappearance from the stage of history, one as final and complete as that of the infamous Nana Sthib himself. Full justice is done to the conspicuous gallantry of Captain Brown; but one cannot help feeling that the remarkable merits of Mr. (afterwards Sir Richard) Jenkins, the Resident, meet with scant recognition.

A couple of brilliant episodes, the well-known story of the blowing in of the Kabul gate of Ghazni (in which Durand's undoubted deserts are allowed, perhaps unduly, to eclipse the no less sterling claims to notice of George Thomson) and the account of the less known, but not less stirring nocturnal plumbing of a Fort Ditch in the Punjab Campaign, will repay perusal; as will the "Civilian in Camp," from which many political lessons may be gained.* The night and day on the Punjab Frontier is the fullest, and, on the whole, the best narrated story in the book; and forcibly reminds the render of Lewis Brown's diary of the siege of Kahun, given, not long since, to the readers of the Arma and Navy Magazine, and noticed by us at the time. Punjab Frontier life, whatever else it may be, is never for long together dull.

The little volume ends, appropriately enough, considering its clerical authorship, with a sketch of "an Indian Chaplain's Career," the career being that of the Rev. J. P. Harris, of Lucknow siege renown, respecting whom the author seemingly writes from personal knowledge. Vixere fortes ante Agamemnona. Among an Indian chaplain, who has nobly done his duty of a life's self-sacrifice, has lived and died unrecorded in this world. But among those whose deeds have been handed down, of none can the memory be more green than of Mr. Harris, and of one whose name can, in this connection, never be forgotten, "Padre" Whiting

Whiting.

The little volume, though its authorship shows itself by "many intallible proofs," is interesting to a degree, and can confidently be recommended. No book is fuller of profit for English readers than one which shows them the noble examples of Englishmen who—to use Baron Hübner's striking words—"combine the qualities of the hero, missionary of civilization, politician, judge, soldier, and administrator, living constantly under a burning sky." Such are the men whom Indian service tends to produce; and Mr. Cave-Browne deserves thanks for reminding us what manner of men they are.

THE ENGLISH ILLUSTRATED MAGAZINE+

"The English Illustrated Magazine" for 1885-86, which has just been issued, will be a welcome guest in the coming evenings when the fireside and a book are the inseparable companions of the many who in summer betake themselves to the Colinderies, or otherwise enjoy the pleasure of "cating the air." Nor, we venture to think, will a single reader be disappointed. The illustrations are excellent beyond compare, alike as works of art and as graphic and picturesque representations of scenes which please, or of events which interest. In making these observations we had intended to have drawn attention to some of the leading engravings as illustrative of our remarks, and as indicative that we had not used the language of exaggeration. But on criticish we had not used the language of exaggeration. But on criticish we had not used the language of exaggeration but few were left unpraised, so we refrain. What is chiefly noticeable in this most admirable and attractive publication is the circumstance that there are no "fads" on the part of the Editor, who does not favour one particular school, or give prominence to one individual style. There are men, women, children, heads, landscapes, ships, buildings, water, birds, beasts, and fishes—some highly finished, some little more than outline; some light, some dark, some simple scrolls, some elaborate "head pieces," but each and ail excellent. Lastly, paper, type, and letterpress leave nothing to be desired. If a reader of these remarks is of opinion that we have been unduly lavish of praise let him procure a copy of the volume, and we have no fear as to the verdict.

THERE is reason to believe that the Ameer is meditating an attack on Kafiristan with a view to bring that region completely under his control. The Afghans have for a long time steadily encroached on Kafir territory. The Ameer apparently now desires to terminate the struggle by a final subjugation of the Kafirs. The arms and money supplied to him by the Government of India will enable him to accomplish his design with a good prospect of success.

GENERAL MACPHERSON'S FORCE IN BURMA.

TO THE BUTTOR

Sir,—Though late in the day may I now add another "still small voice," to those heard before, against our mad military pranks in Upper Burma, which are really quite needless, and as harmful as they are needless:—

1. No English soldiers (pace Dr. Kane, of Belfast) should be sent to Upper Burma; they are costly and ill adapted to hunt naked robbers through impenetrable jungle.

2. Selected police levies from India, abundantly officered by British officers, accompanied by planty of good magistrates, should be sent to the country, and posted in strong detachments in every disturbed part, each detachment accompanied by a magistrate, and being in touch one with the other. No artillery

3. No horses should be imported into the country; they will only die. The Burman ponies should be used, and elephants.

4. The country must be cleared of jungle and drained; roads, canals, and railways constructed; and money must be spent and lent by Great Britain, and not taken from the Indians, who have no desire to hold Burma, and are almost bankrupt.

5. It is no use to hope that Burmans will either make reliable policemen or soldiers for many years to come.

6. To send General Macpherson and an expensively commanded army is simply to waste valuable lives and money needlessly.

7. To throw the expenditure on India is a gross act of injustice.

8. One fact is indisputably from the present case, and that is: the sooner the Indian Council at home is abolished the better it will be, from every point of view, economical and general, seeing its members are useless to control the Indian Secretary of State.

9. The basis of government in India must be broadened, and made far more representative; this will strengthen immensely, far more than I can point out in a short letter, the hands of the Viceroy, and greatly please and satisfy the educated portion of the Indian peoples, which is day by day becoming larger and

General Macpherson's force will not find any enemy to fight, but he will lose plenty of men and horses, as the country is very deadly after the rains, and when the rivers and water-courses begin to dry up, and their muddy beds are exposed to a sweltering tropical sun. However, "it is an ill wind that blows good to nobody," and the Irrawaddy Flotilla Company should be thankful that their shareholders will divide a good dividend -after next Christmas.

Your obedient servant,

A. R. GLOAG, Lieut.-General,
Late Commanding R.A., B.B.D. .2, Tanfield Court, Inner Temple, E.C., 22nd September, 1886.

DURING the past year a Russian "scientific" mission has been exploring those parts of the Russian "scientific" mission has been exploring those parts of the Russian territory adjoining the newly fixed Afghan frontier. In the giddy pursuits of science the Commissioners do not always seem to have been quite responsible for their movements, for we read that on the 13th of July they "accidentally" found themselves in the pass of Zulfikar. The mission returned to Askabad at the end of the month, having completed its labours.

THE postal regulations of Afghanistan seem to be of a forreceived in one morning the accumulated dak of three weeks. Seventeen copies of each newspaper, to say nothing of letters and three English mails, must have been rather an embarrassing windfall.

He joined the 73rd Highlanders in 1867, and has since served in the 21st North British, now the Scots Fusiliers, taking part in the Ashantee war of 1873, and in the South African war from 1879 to 1881. He was present at the capture of Coomassie, the battle of Ulundi, the attack and capture of Sekukuni's town, the storming of the Fighting Koppie, and in Sekukuni's town, the storming of the Fighting Koppie, and in the Transvaal commanded at the defence of the fort of Rustengurg, being twice wounded, once dangerously, and once severely.

THE seditious Native journalists of India who deny that the British Government of that country is a paternal one which coniders no want of its subjects to be too small to be attended to, ought to be converted to a more amiable mood on perusal of an official notification lately issued, to the following effect:—" The official notification lately issued, to the following effect:—"The Government of India sanctions, as a special case, the supply of a new wooden leg to Sardha Singh, pensioned Duffadar of the 9th Bengal Lancers, who lost his own (sic) when serving with Hodson's Horse during the Indian Mutiny." Official grammar is not always easy to understand, and it is not quite clear from the above what kind of leg Sardha Singh lost; it might have been a leg that he was born with or a wooden leg which was his own property. But surely that must be a paternal Government which announces to the world in an official gazette that. "as a special announces to the world in an official gazette that, "as a special case," it gives a new wooden leg to one of its soldiers thirty years after he had "lost his own."

A DREADFUL murder has been committed at Moulmein. Father Biet, Roman Catholic priest, and Mr. Ramos were seated in the latter's house, when two Burmans and one Chinaman entered and stabbed both to death. The motive for the deed is unknown, but it is supposed that the murderers only intended killing Ramos, who is a money-lender, but also murdered Father Biet, lest he should bear witness against them.

SINCE the institution of the Victoria Cross there has been considerable disputation as to the wisdom of the policy which inaugurated such a decoration. Many who could not be called cynics declared that, to decorate a soldier because he was brave, was almost as doubtful a compliment as to congratulate a woman because she was chaste. Bravery is supposed to be a soldierly attribute, inseparable from the profession of arms, and to make a attribute, inseparable from the profession of arms, and to make a special merit of it was held in some quarters to be a mockery and an insult to the warrior. It was difficult, too, to define the limit where the soldier ceased to perform the mere "duty" of being brave and earned a special distinction for extraordinary courage; the records of the Victoria Cross show some curious instances of the Victoria Balancia Balancia and the state of the st the records of the Victoria Cross show some curious instances of this difficulty. But Sir Frederick Roberts told the other day at Simla the story of a deed which, had it occurred in Roman history, would have made the hero of it immortal, and yet in English history it has had no place, and the doer of it has received neither reward nor fame. His name possibly has been forgotten—"unhonofired and unsung." But here is the story of the deed, as told by the present Commander-in-Chief of India, an eye-wieness to the scene: at the Relief of Lucknow, when a heavy fire from the loop-holed walls was making terrible havoc in the ranks of the storming party of the Sikanderbagh, a young Sikh, of the 4th Punjab Infantry, passed his arm through the wicket of the gate and endeavoured to draw back the bolt with which it was barred. A sword cut from within nearly severed his hand from the wrist; nothing daunted he withdrew the injured arm and thrust in the other one. This shared the fate of the first, but not before the other one. This shared the fate of the first, but not before the bolt had been drawn, and the gallant Sikh had the satisfaction of seeing his comrades stream through the gateway, which by his determined bravery had been opened for them." There was no difficulty in defining the boundary line between courage and heroism here, but no Victoria Cross was granted; the rules of the Order did not recognise an exceptional case of a Native soldier. The story, however, will now find a place in England's military history amongst other bright deeds that the world "will not willingly let die."—Broad Arrow.

THE NEW GOVERNOR OF MADRAS.—The Right Honourable Robert Bourke, who is to be our next ruler, is an Irishman—not an Irishman of the Parnell type. He is made of the flesh and blood of a family to two eminent members of which we are so familiar that we can unhesitatingly form a favourable opinion of him. The highly praiseworthy career of two of his brothers has endeared the family of Bourkes to us. The late Lord Mayo was a model of a Governor-General, and so was Major the Honourable Bourke as Postmaster-General in Madras. Besides his above connection, our Governor-elect is the son-in-law of the late Marquis of Dalhousie, an able Governor-General of India. But the gravest question for consideration is, whether our new ruler will be able o satisfy the wants of that section of the people here who call themselves "thoughtful Natives," and who are ever ready to con-demn any statesman, however clever and however businesslike he may be, should he deviate the least from the lines of policy laid may be, should he deviate the least from the lines of policy laid down by them for his conduct. Is Mr. Bourke blessed with a patience to quietly receive the insults and worry which the clamouring section of our Native Press is apt and addicted to offer upon every little occurrence against their wish? They disapproved of a Tory Duke; they have condemned a Whig Mister—now a Knight. It is the language of that section of the Native Press that forced Sir Grant Duff to despise it, and to adopt the process of depositions their productions in his waster-paper healest process of depositing their productions in his waste paper basket. It is not the expression of a host of real or imaginary grievances, it is the language in which they were expressed by the so-called exponents of the people's opinion, which created a disgust in the mind of Sir Mountstuart, and things grew worse and more un-pleasant day after day. However much freedom may be granted to a people in the expression of their opinions there is a line of discretion and orderliness always drawn for the communication of their thoughts to their rulers. This is a lesson which some of our brethren of the Press wero never taught at school; their teachers do not appear to have pointed out to them the difference between independence and impudence.—Muslim Herald.

VOLUNTEERS IN INDIA.

Ir there be any place in the British Empire which embraces so many places in the world, where the Volunteer movement ought to receive special encouragement, that place surely is India. However much certain philanthropists would like to make believe that our rule im India must be founded on the affection of the Natives for us, the fact cannot be disguised that we have not yet gained those affections, and that we hold India by the strong right hand, however anxious we may be to conceal it under the velvet glove. The lesson of the Mutiny taught the Government of India that it was absolutely necessary that a Volunteer force should be formed wherever a sufficient number of Europeans were present to compose even a company or a squad-in fact, that it was only a wise precaution to put gentle pressure upon every English. man in the country capable of bearing arms to enrol in such a force, so as to be ready to protect home and family in case of another danger to our rule. The gentle pressure was hardly needed; the willingness of the non-official community to volunteer was unquestioned, and immediately after the Mutiny a Volunteer army might have been got together which every Englishman in India able to shoulder and fire a rifle would have joined. But the Government of that day, with the passing away of the immediate danger of 1857, threw cold water on the project. The Volunteer Guards of Calcutta were disbanded in an almost contemptuous order by Lord Canning, and no further attempt was made to give to the Government an auxiliary force which might have been of the greatest aid to it at any moment of necessity. It was not until nearly the close of Sir John Lawrence's Viceroyalty that the Volunteer movement took a practical shape in Calcutta. It had been carried on by fits and starts by a few enthusiasts, but it was made more of a plaything than a duty antil the command was given to Colonel Walton, who, going heart and soul into the work, soon got together and made efficient as fine a body of amateur soldiers as any Commander-in-Chief could have desired to see. The martial spirit spread, and corps of Rifle Volunteers sprang up throughout the length and breadth of India. At present the "Auxiliary European force" in that country consists of four regiments of light horse, four batteries of artillery, eleven companies of mounted rifles, and fifty-two infantry corps, numbering in all between 15,000 and 16,000 men. These are one and all in a state of very creditable efficiency, but their being so is owing more to their own pluck and determination than to any nursing or supervision by the authorities. There is no special efficer tolook after the administration of this force. "The overworked officers of the Adjutant-General's Department," says the Pioneer, "have each in his own section' to deal with the multifarious reports and references that come in daily quite as a matter of routine; no officer has the time, even if he had the inclination, to interest himself in volunteering; and the only wonder is that the various corps are in such a high stateof efficiency. The cry for more officers is constantly heard -the Bengal Army List shows that even in the capital of India the administrative battalion of the Presidency Volunteers is now short of six captains and seven lieutenants—and Commandants know full well that hundreds of men could be got to swell the ranks were the Government really to show more interest in volunteering and raise the status of the force."

We read, further, that although successive Commandersin-Chief since the Mutiny have recorded the necessity of keeping up a Volunteer force in India, and although the various Governments have encouraged their employés to enter the ranks, yet the corps are left to drift along as best they may, and any provision for the administration of the whole body is apparently as far off as ever. "We have," continues the journal from which we have already quoted, "for many years past urged upon Government the necessity of creating some machinery—the simpler the better-by which the Indian Volunteers can be made, as a whole, an auxiliary force available for employment in the country at any moment; but not even one Staff Officer at Army Headquarters has been appointed to look after Volunteering. It seems highly probable that another Russian scare is coming upon us, and doubtless we shall have a repetition of what happened last year; but the Volunteers are in no better case now than then, and Government is not the least in sympathy with them.

This extraordinary apathy on the part of officialdom is surely one of those blunders which are said to be worse than a crime. Those who have had an experience of work in India in the plains, even in what is called the cold weather, can understand that Volunteer drilling and firing can only be carried on at the sacrifice of much personal ease and comfort. After bearing the heat and burden of an Indian day the temptation is to seek repose rather than, to turn out to parade-but the men of trade and commerce, the planters, and other laborious workers have at eventide and early dawn shown an energy and determination to do their duty as Volunteers, which reflects great honour upon them. Volunteers in India have few of the attractions which at fêtes and reviews in England give a pleasant and picturesque colouring to amateur soldiering. In India it is rough and apparently thankless work. But it is work which ought to be done, and which ought to meet with every encouragement from the Government. The Volunteer force there ought not to be as the Pioneer to-day describes it: "It is still 'Nobody's child,' and its lot is a hard and uncomfortable one."

COLONIAL AND INDIAN EXHIBITION.—THE BURMESE REGALIA FROM MANDALAY.—From King Theebaw's Palace at Mandalay a magnificent collection of jewellery and plate has been sent to England by the Viceroy; and it has been lent to the Exhibition by the Secretary of State for India. There are gold vases of different sizes, dishes of quaint shape, some in the form of a duck, bettel-boxes, reliquaries to hold the teeth of Buddha or other objects of veneration, jade ornaments, daggers and swords, dresses, hats, slippers, and a state umbrella; and, most noteworthy of all, drinking cups with large cone-shaped covers which envelop the vessel, a gold bottle with a cray-fish shaped head, and King Theebaw's horoscope written on ralm leaves. Most of these articles are heavily set with diamonds, rubies, emeralds, sapphires, pearls and other precious stones. The collection has been placed in cases adjacent to the Ceylon Court.

BILLWISE PATRIOTS — Lamontable to relate a Nationalist.

BURMESE PATRIOTS.-Lamentable to relate, a Native-edited journalist has been sadly exercised because an Anglo-Indian paper has styled Burmese dacoits "blackguards." A license of indiscretion so monstrous has called down upon it a homily that Indiscretion so monstrous has called down upon it a homily that should not be lost to readers of newspapers. Here is what our Native friend remarks:—"O, heaven! are they blackguards who are so nobly fighting for the independence of their country? Had these Burmans any quarrel with us? Not the smallest. Burma was wide enough for them. How is it that we should mow them down all—men, women, children and call them "blackguards," for they would not submit to a foreign yoke. Who are the real blackguards? Those that are defending their homes and hearths against the ravages of ruffians, or these savage monsters in human form who urged by bloodthirst and earth-hunger have brought ruin and desolation upon a defence-less innocent country? Those that are fighting for the honour of their wives and sisters or those that Sniders in hand are not sparing even innocent maids? sparing even innocent maids?

MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

The revised Army Regulations applying to all India are now in the Press, and will be shortly issued from Army Headquarters.

THE new commands in Burma are as follows:

2nd Brigade—Bhamo and Natha. Brigadier-General R. Griffiths commanding.

4th Brigade—Myingyan, Mahline, Meitela and Wundwin. Brigadier-General W. S. A. Lockhart commanding.
5th Brigade—Shwaybo, Ruby Mines, Yeu, Kyoukmyoung and four new posts. Brigadier-General R. C. Stewart commanding.
6th Brigade—Membu, Taungdwingyi and Pagan. Brigadier-General R. C. Low commanding.
Chindwin Force (head quarter Kinda). All attained to the Chindwin Force (head-quarters Kindat)—All stations in the Chindwin Valley. Lieutenant-Colonel Toker, 18th B.I., commands.

THE following officers have accompanied Sir Herbert Macpherson to Burma:—Brigadier-General Elles, Adjutant-General; Brigadier-General Cox; Colonel McLeod, Deputy Adjutant-General; Colonel Tillard, Assistant Adjutant-General, Royal Artillery; Lieutenant Arbuthnot, 3rd Light Cavalry; Captain T. Greenaway, 22nd Regiment, M.I.; Captain Pickaid Cambridge, A.D.C.; Lieutenant Bernard; Surgeon-Major C. Sibthorpe (in medical charge), and Colonel Hawkes, Commissary-General.

THE following order of the Governor of Madras in Council has been published:—The Governor-in-Council is pleased to appoint Colonel E. Faunce, Staff Corps, officiating quartermaster general, to be brigadier-general, with temporary rank, during the absence in Burma of the Commander-in-Cnief. Colonel Faunce will undertake charge of the offices of adjutant-general and quartermaster general at Ootacamund during the abovenamed period. The Government regret that Colonel Faunce will be thus deprived of the opportunity of proceeding to Burma on active service in command of the brigade to which he was nominated by the Commander-in-Chief, but his Excellency-in-Council is convinced that in the interests of the public service his retention in Octacamund is unavoidable, no officer of source experience and camund is unavoidable, no officer of equal experience and reliability being available in this emergency for the direction of affairs in the offices of adjutant and quartermaster-general. The Commander-in-Chief has signified his entire concurrence with the views of the Governor-in-Council as expressed in this order.

The Military Note which appeared last week stating that "the Mackenzie equipment for Native Cavalry had been found unsuitable" was based on a misapprehension. No such official opinion has been passed upon it, and the Equipment Committee now sitting at Simia has not come to any such conclusion. That the equipment commends itself to some commanding officers is proved by the fact that several regiments have voluntarily adopted it.

THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA has sent out instructions for all bandmasters of the British service returning to England for retirement, &c., to be sent home by one of the early troopships of the season, so as to allow of their successors being sent out to India by one of the troopships in the same season.

As regards the Punjab Frontier Force under its new conditions of existence, the Commander-in-Chief will retain in his own of existence, the Commander-in-Chief will retain in his own hands what may be called the patronage of the Force, i.e, he will make first appointments, whether staff or regimental. Further, the transfers to the Guides and 5th Goorkhas, for which regiments separate lists have always been kept, will be made by his Excellency, as also transfers from Infantry to Cavalry. These branches of work will be conducted in his Military Secretary's office, while all other matters connected with promotion, discipline and so on, will pass through the ordinary channels in the Adjutant-General's office. In accordance with the wishes of Government, as little interference as possible will take place with existing arrangements. existing arrangements.

INSTANCES having occurred of men being detained in India beyond the time at which they should have been sent home on the expiration of their service, Commanding Officers have been informed that they are responsible that all men whose time has actually expired, or who have become due for transfer to the Army Reserve during the non-trooping season, are sen home at the commencement of the following season.

THE Field-Marshal Commanding in-Chief has ordered that depot reliefs of officers shall be so arranged between India and England that the officers for the depot and those for India should cross one another en route.

On the return of his Royal Highness the Duke of Connaught to India to take command of the Rawal Pindi Division, General Wilkinson will return to Calcutta, and Brigadier-General Le Mesurier will act for General East at Saugor.

People will be sorry to hear that the 4th King's Own at Quetta have been suffering very much from fever, as many as 4'> per cent. being in hospital at one time.

CERTAIN changes in the appointments of officers of the Adjutant-General's Department in Madras will take place before the end of this month.

LIEUTENANT-COLONEL WESTON, officiating Assistant Adjutant-General, Headquarters, has been ordered to proceed to Mudras to superintend the embarkation of the troops ordered for Burms, and will, on completion of that duty, take up those of Deputy Assistant Adjutant-General, Eastern District, from Lieutenant-Colonel Rankin, who has been directed to proceed to Ootacamund to assume charge of the office of Assistant Adjutant-General. Colonel Rankin will succeed Major Hope as Deputy Adjutant-General on that officer proceeding to join his regiment, which has been detailed for service in Burma. Major Clerk, Deputy Assistant Adjutant-General, Belgaum District, will then take up the duties of Assistant Adjutant-General at Headquarters.

A WING of a Punjab Cavalry Regiment from Rajanpur and Wing of a Native Infantry Regiment from Dera Gnazi Khan will shortly be detached to Rukhni, or such other convenient place as may be decided by the Punjab Government and the Agent, Governor General, Beluchistan, to form an escort for the protection of working parties on the read from Dera Ghazi Khan to Anambar.

BRIGADE-SURGEON MORICE, 2nd Battalich 4th Georkhas, has been ordered to Calcutta to take over the administrative medical charge of the Presidency District.

TO THE PUBLIC OPINION OF THE PEOPLE OF

INDIA.

THERE are in England large classes willing and anxious to do justice to India, but they find it very difficult to know how to act. They complain that Indian questions are intricate; that the opinions of official experts are contradictory; and that the people of India are dumb, and do not give expression to their needs. This defect is now remedied by publishing monthury (in Bombay) a magazine somewhat similar in nature to Public Opinion in England, which provides a compendium of all that is most valuable in the native journals throughout india on the leading topics of the day. The Voice of India thus gives forth a clear sound, interpreting between the rulers and the ruled, and making known the true wishes and feelings of the Indian people.

ing between the rulers and the ruled, and making known the true wishes and feelings of the Indian veople.

The Magazine advocates no views of its own. It seeks only to reflect with care and accuracy the views set forth in the native press. The Indian people are naturally docile and consorvative; and it will be seen that the writings thus brought before the English public are characterised by a knowledge of facts, and generally by practical good sense and moderation. No doubt grievances are from time to time being set forth; but it is a policy of prudence, no less than of justice to give these grievances a fair constitutional hearing. Accordingly, it is hoped that this publication will be subscribed for by Members of Parliament and other public men desirous of dealing with Indian questions, and that the facts thus brought together in a convenient form will be of value to journalists and other public writers. It is specially desired to bring the Magazine before the public in Clubs, Reading-rooms, Libraries, and Institutes throughout England, with a view to promote a sustained and intelligent interest in the welfare of our Indian Empire, comprising as it does 220 millions of our fellow-subjects.

[BY OVERLAND MAIL.]

THE Overland Mail brings us letters and advices from Bombay to the 14th September; from Allahabad and Madras to the 12th September; and from Calcutta to the 11th September.

As now arranged, the Viceroy leaves Simla on the 28th October and goes straight to Umballa, thence by special train the same night to Bhawulpore, where his Excellency stops two days, leaving on Monday, the 1st November, for Lahore. His Excellency remains at Lahore about three days, proceeding thence via Ahmedabad to Baroda, where he remains about three days.

THE VICEROY arrives at Calcutta about the 14th December, but the date has not been definitely fixed yet.

H.E. LOBD REAY distributed the prizes to the pupils of the Poona High School for Native girls on the 10th ult., and in doing so availed himself of the opportunity of disclaiming any intention on the part of Government of introducing legislation in regard to the customs of infant marriage and enforced widowhood prevailing amongst the Hindoos.

THERE is good reason to believe that the seditious proclamation recently circulated in the Punjab is the genuine production of Dhuleep Singh, as he has in his communications with the India Office held language somewhat similar in tone.

A VERY practical notion of what the Silver Question signifies to the Indian Finances is furnished by the fact that the recent partial recovery in sterling exchange will, if maintained, improve the prospects of the Exchequer to the extent of half a million.

THE attitude of the Bonerwals continues threatening, and the Guides are on the qui vive accordingly. It now seems almost impossible that an expedition can be avoided.

Public traffic over the Lower Bolan Railway up to Mach was resumed on September 1st, and the Sind-Peshin line is being pushed on from Quetta as sharply as possible. The metals are already laid five miles out of Quetta, and work on the bridges is being carried on successfully. The weather continues fine.

ONE of the suggestions made by the Finance Committee is to be the reduction by three lakhs of the annual expenditure of the Punjab Public Works Department.

THE BISHOP OF CALCUTTA has been somewhat seriously indisposed. A confirmation service at Saharunpore had to be postponed owing to his lordship's detention through illness at Meerut.

MR. H. M. DURAND, the Foreign Secretary, will probably go home on short leave for three months, when the Government returns to the plains.

Mr. P. W. Holdenness, C.S., Under-Secretary to the Government of India in the Revenue and Agricultural Department, will not revert to his appointment on return from furlough, but returns to the North-West Provinces as Joint Magistrate.

"A MEMORIAL on behalf of Mr. Gibbons is being forwarded to Government. He was brought to Calcutta on the 10th inst.

A LARGELY attended meeting of European and Native merchants was held at Aden on Thursday, August 26th, with a view to the formation of a Chamber of Commerce.

THE transfer of forests from the Home Department to the Revenue and Agricultural Department has been settled, and takes place immediately.

Mr. F. L. CHARLES, C.S., has been appointed to act as Municipal Commissioner of Bombay during the absence of Mr. E. C. K. Ollivant.

THE Punjab Government has applied for an extension of the services of the Hon. Colonel W. G. Davies, C.S.I., its Financial Commissioner, for one year.

Mr. JUSTICE MACPHERSON has made an order in the Calcusta High Court for the inspection of the documents in connection with the Statesman libel case.

SEVERAL planters in Sylhet have been fined for non-payment of Income-Tax.

THE members of the Finance Committee and their Provincial associates have assembled at Bombay and commenced work, beginning with the question of the expenditure of the High Court. The Committee were next to consult with the Chief Justice.

THE official report from Upper Burma for the week ending the 5th ult. states that the districts of the northern division are generally quiet. The crops are doing well.

SHWEE KYEE, the dacoit leader, has been captured near Yemethen, which district is settling down, though several large dacoit gangs are still there.

On the 28th ult. a band of the blocaded Shirani tribe, on the Dehra Ismail Khan border, issued at midnight from the Chandwan Pass and attacked a village, killing and wounding six men and over one hundred cattle.

THE reported death of the Governor of Herat is incorrect. He has been suffering for some time past from an epileptic affection, but his health is now improving.

But little news has been received lately from the Boundary Commission. Fever still lingers in their camps at Kham-i-Ab and Shadian. There are signs already of an early winter in that region, and the start for Kabul must be made very soon or the passes will be closed.

SIR WEST RIDGEWAY recently paid a visit to Mazari-Sharif, where he was received with much honour in open darbar by Mahomed Islak Khan, the Governor of Afghan Turkistan. There was a parade of troops before a large assembly of people, and our Commissioner's reception was most cordial. The event is one more proof of the worth-lessness of the statements published of late as to the hostile attitude of the Afghans towards the Boundary Commission, and the discontent of the Amir at the result of the demarcation. The darbar was held at the special instruction of the Amir Abdur Rahman himself.

The imports into India, for the four months, 1st April to 31st July, amounted in value to Rs. 18,62,08,883, as compared with Rs. 15,24,45,250 in the preceding year, being an increase of Rs. 3,37,63,633. The exports during the same period amounted in value to Rs. 29,74,93,991, as compared with Rs. 27,04,35,489 in 1885, being an increase of Rs. 2,70,63,502. The increase in the value of the exports is in great measure attributable to briskness in the wheat trade. During the four months mentioned above as much as 10,622,272 cwts. were exported, against an export of 7,600,447 cwts. in 185, and 5,894,948 cwts. in 1884.

THE net value of gold imported in the first four months of the current financial year was Rs. 72,17,477, and that of silver imported, Rs. 2,32,66,593, making the total net imports of both metals Rs. 3,04,84,070. The assay value of coins and bullion received in the Indian mints during the same four months was Rs. 1,99,23,630, and of that coined and examined Rs. 2,11,9:,061.

Notes of the Meek.

WITH all in his possession—worldly goods and happy domestic ties—to make life in its eventide pleasant at home. Sir Charles Aitchison still prefers an Indian career. It is officially notified that he will succeed Sir Steuart Bayley as Member of the Viceroy's Executive Council in March next.

Who will go to the Punjah? There is a report that Sir Charles Bernard will obtain that much coveted appointment, and that Sir Lepel Griffin will take up the reins he will have dropped in Burma. But this is all conjecture. A failure in Burma, Sir Charles would not be perhaps a success in the Punjab, and it may be doubted whether Sir Lepel Griffin will care to hazard a rising reputation as a good administrator by accepting the thankless and difficult office which would have to be filled on Sir Charles Bernard's transfer from his present post. It may be, however, that Lord Dufferin will insist upon the post being filled by a strong man who has already given proof of his fitness, and Sir Lepel may be induced to accept the pressing, if somewhat dangerous, honour. He would certainly prefer the Punjab, and the Punjab would prefer him to any other candidate or nominee now in the field.

A CORRESPONDENT writing to the Times of India regarding the rule that Indian Chaplains shall receive pensions of £292 a year after fifteen years, and £365 after twenty years' service, asks why these gentlemen should be so much more considered than their military brethren? "By the present rules a military man coming to India at twenty can retire at forty on £250 a year; a Chaplain coming at twenty-five can retire at the same age on £292 a year. The Chaplain on retiring has quite as good a chance of a berth at home as the former, if not better. His duties would certainly be more arduous than those of the military man if the Scriptural command was literally carried out to 'forsake all and follow me,' but this can hardly be said to be done by men who, as a body, marry early, who live in very comfortable quarters, draw good pay, and have an easy time of it." The correspondent is rather hard upon a hardworking and most meritorious class whose duties in India are often of a very trying nature, but have always been most consciention ly performed. The reason given for Indian Chaplains receiving more favourable terms of pension than military men that they go out late in life to that country, the same correspondent combats by saying that they go home early, as Charles Lamb said of himself when rebuked for going late to office. But, as a fact, the majority of chaplains remain over twenty years in India, and do not take much advantage of furlough. It has been said that the diocese of a Colonial Bishop is chiefly Bond-street, but this does not apply to Indian Chaplains.

It is to be hoped that the Secretary of State for India will see his way to meet the fair demands of the Uncovenanted Civil Servants to have their pensions paid in sterling, without waiting until the matter is argued out at law. When the Uncovenanted leave and pension rules were first fixed, that service was composed mostly of Eurasians and Natives-the term "Uncovenanted" was one which in India represented a class lower in the social scale than now. The rates of pension then fixed were thought liberal enough, as the recipients would most probably draw them in India. But times have changed, and the service has changed too. The "Uncovenanted" name has no longer the same disabilities and drawbners attached to The gentlemen who are now complaining of the hardship of having their limited scale of pensions still further reduced by the present rate of exchange are gentlemen whose official and social position entitle them to not less consideration than their more formulate co-workers of the "Covenanted" class. To take advantage in 1886 of the doubtful reading of a clause in the Resolution of 1885, and to pension one body of its servants in a depreciated currency, whilst another body is pensioned in sterling, is neither a wise policy nor an economical one in the end for a Government.

We have not yet been bitten by a mad bi-metallist, and so have not yet been able to find in the theories of that school a satisfactory solution of the present exchange problem. Our worthy friend and correspondent, H. G. Keene, has a letter in our columns to-day, written with a poet's fervour on the prosaic subject of "Fixed Ratio," but we confess we prefer "H. G. K." when he wanders into the groves of Parnassus rather than when he strays into the mazes of Finance. The "Fixed Ratio" which we have been asking for on behalf of the servants of the State in India is that equitable adjustment which will allow them to remit to their families at home without a sacrifice of 25 per cent. of their salaries. This is the question for immediate settlement by the State itself without waiting for the end of the battle between bi-metallists and monometallists.

WITH reference to the question (to which we referred last week) between the Home brewers and the brewers in India, our military contemporary, The Broad Arrow, has the following:—"The average price of a hogshead of English beer in India has been calculated at Rs. 61, and the Indian brewers have proposed to the Government of India to supply at Rs. 50, thus giving a saving of Rs. 800,000 per annum, or Rs. 10,00,000 if exchange is taken into account, which it would have to be if English beer were provided. The Simla brevery has taken the contract for Upper Burma at Rs. 47 per hogshead. Notwithstanding all this, the home brewers are, it is said, ready to compete if allowed to do so, and the result may be that Tommy Atkins may in the end not only get his beer free, but be paid for drinking it—a consummation which his fine natural thirst will appreciate. But the Indian brewers are politicians as well as purveyors of malt liquor. They have pointed out to the Government of India, and through that channel to the Secretary of State, that the question does not resolve itself into a purely financial one, but that it is part of the Imperial policy which has been declared by the Government at home to be the approved one for India, viz.: to develop all kinds of local manufactures and industries, so that India should be self-supporting, especially now with a depreciated currency. And they further call attention to the danger in case of a European war of the beer supply for India being cut off altogether if the troops are to depend on getting their malt liquor from England. The English brewers are ready to combat these objections, and so the quarrel stands. If the result of the battle be cheaper, wholesome drink for the soldier in India, it may not be one to be deplored except by the total abstainers; but it will be lamentable if it end in destroying a local industry, to replace it by a monopoly which would mean a return to former high prices, and robbing poor Tommy Atkins of his cheap beer."

Hill-Migration.—The Government of Madras appears to have settled the question of migrating to the hills very sensibly, if we may trust the reports which are current on the subject. Instructions are said to have been issued that, in future, the stay of the officials at Ootacamund is to be limited to three months during the hottest season of the year, and that the establishment to be taken up by each department is to be confined to one senior and one junior clerk, and a copyist, the business to be conducted at the hills consisting only of urgent and important matters. We do not think that anyone would object to three months of the year being regularly passed at the hills, not by the Viceroy only, but by the members of Council who are generally men of advanced age. It is not tha personal retreat of the Viceroy or of the Councils from the plains during the hot weather that is resented, but the abuse which has quietly grown up of everybody going there, as a matter of course, for the greater part of the year. We speak the sense we believe of the whole community when we say that it has no desire whatever to keep the Viceroy and his Council all the year round in this city. The stay at the hills should not be so prolonged as it now is, while three-fourths of the gentlemen who go there ought not to be allowed to go at all, except under the regular provisions of their service as to "leave." The sphere of their work is in the plains, and they should stay there and do it, as other men have to do, without hankering after the conversion of their service into a mere round of gaiety and amusement, while dragging their establishments at their heels.—

(BY TELEGRAPH.) (Times Correspondents.) INDIA.

CALCUTTA, SEPT. 26.

The Bombay Government deserves credit for being the first local Government to address itself seriously to a subject of great importance for India, namely, technical ducation. In a long resolution just issued it has laid down the outlines of the scheme which it favours under three heads:—agriculture, art industries, and mechanical industries. It proposes that the College of Science at Poonah should be a central institution for the teaching of higher agriculture, and that local classes and schools should be established throughout the province under the supervision of district officers, and of the educational department. The Jamsetjee Jeejcebhoy School of Art in Bombay is to be the centre of Government efforts for the purpose of art teaching, and a report as called for as to the propriety of obtaining additional teaching. The question whether a technological institute for mechanical industries should be established is discussed at some length, and the Government expresses the opinion that the time for doing so has not yet come. Meanwhile, it is suggested that the committee has not yet come. Meanwhile, it is suggested that the committee of the Ripon Memorial Fund should form itself into an association for promoting technical education in Bombay city, the Government promising to give it the utmost possible aid. The main dependence of other parts of the province must be upon the high schools for elementary science and upon such institutions as may be started by means of local efforts. The Government concludes by saying that the scheme is not academic, but that it is meant to enhance the well-being of the people at large by giving increased employment to labour and capital and by cementing harmonious relations between them.

The Bill dealing with the adulteration of ghee, or clarified butter, which was so hurriedly introduced ten days ago in response to the urgent cry of the Native community, was passed on Friday by the Bengal Council. The scope of the measure was considerably enlarged by the Select Committee, and it will apply not to Calcutta only, but to all municipalities in the province. It is to be hoped that the panic which has prevailed during the last few weeks will now subside. The reason for that panic is apparent. few weeks will now subside. The reason for that panic is apparent Ghee enters into the composition of every kind of cooked focd used by all classes of the Natives, so that its adulteration with beef or pork fat meant loss of caste to Hindoos and defilement to Mahomedans. So great has the panic been that it is said the wealthier Natives have been importing ghee from Persia, while those unable to command that luxury have been abstaining altogether from cooked food. At the Meeting of the Council a altogether from cooked food. At the Meeting of the Council a European member complained that the opportunity had not been taken to extend the provisions of the Bill so as to cover articles of food used by Europeans. But the Lieutenant-Governor pointed out that this would have entailed delays, and stated that the subject had attracted the notice of the Supreme Government, which was consulting the local administrations regarding the advisability of passing a general Act to prevent the adulteration of food of food.

The Duke and Duchess of Connaught will, it is expected, arrive in Bombay to-morrow morning. The local government has issued an elaborate programme of the ceremonies to be observed on their an elaborate programme of the ceremonies to be observed on their landing. They will remain one day in Bombay, and proceed on Tuesday on a visit to the Governor at Poonah.

The Viceroy's tour in Southern India will include visits to Hyderabad, Bangalore, Mysore, Ootacamund, Coonoor, Coimt atore, Trichinopoly, Madura, and Tanjore. He will probably not go to Madras, but embark at Negapatam for Calcutta early in December.

The Laltahuri Embankment in Mooishedabad has stood the severe strain to which it was subjected during last month. The Ganges is now falling, and all signs point to an early cessation of the rains, so it may be hoped that the threatened districts will escape a recurrence of last year's calamitous floods.

Transports conveying reinforcements for Burma are now leaving the Indian ports almost daily. General Macpherson will soon be able to take the field with a force sufficient to crush all open resistance. Unfortunately, however, there is no indication that any sense of past mistakes has penetrated the civil administration, or that the state of the country will not be as bad as ever when the troops are withdrawn. Obviously we cannot always keep 30,000 men locked up in Burma. A reopening of the Eastern or the Central Asian question might at any moment necessitate their recall for service elsewhere, and if the weakness and vaculation which have so far marked the civil administration are allowed to continue, it is certain that the withdrawal of the and vacillation which have so far marked the civil administration are allowed to continue, it is certain that the withdrawal of the troops would be followed by an immediate revival of disorder. A well planned system of public works should be commenced, not only with the purpose of opening up the country, but also to provide the means of livelihood for the poorer classes, who are now obliged to take to dacoity for food. A really efficient police, of good morale, and officered by selected Europeans, should be raised. The civil staff should be largely increased, especially in the junior ranks, and recruited from men who have gained some knowledge of the Native language by service in Lower Burma. Such blunders as that of extending an elaborate system of law to the new province, or that of offering a conditional pardon to dacoit chiefs, should be avoided. The Karens and ther Burman tribes should be conciliated, ue being made of their services. It is only by such measures as these that Upper Burma can be thoroughly and permanently pacified. In justice to the Burmese people, and for the honour of England, it is absolutely essential. that there should be no more of the weak, vacillating policy of the last nine months.

BURMA.

RANGOON, SEPT. 26. A Government steam launch which was proceeding from Tounghoo to Ningyan, with Mr. Gladstone, the newly-appointed Deputy Commissioner, on beard, was attacked by 1,500 insurgents. The launch fought its way through the rebels. Of the armed guard on board one policeman was killed and seven were were weunded.

An expedition will start immediately from Mandalay for the ruby mines. Much discontent is expressed at the secrecy observed by the Government of India as to the terms on which the ruby mines are let on lease without having been offered to public competition. The local Government is ignorant of the exact terms agreed upon. It is announced, however, on good authority, that no stipulations have been made that the mines shall be worked through Native agency. If this course, which is opposed to the advice of Sir C. Bernard and the local Government, has been adopted, serious troubles may be anticipated in the district.

An acrimonious controversy has arisen in the local Press respect-An actimonous controversy has arried in the local residence ing the number of lives lost in the Mandalay inundation. The Government contends that the number is small, while the residents in Mandalay agree that the loss of life is considerable. The Government recently received a letter from the Lhathanabaing, who stated that immediately after the inundation many persons informed him that the loss of life was large, and that numerous bodies had been seen. Three weeks subsequently he commenced to make inquiries, and then he heard that iew lives had been lost. The Lhathanabaing himself adopts the latter view, but estimates the pecuniary loss caused by the inundation at 200 lakhs. The local Press remarks that the eagerness of the Government to minimise the loss of life shows that it perceives that the inundation was due to the neglect by the officials of ordinary precautions.

Sir C. Bernard will return to Mandalay to-morrow.

RANGOON, SEPT. 29. The insurgents, according to latest reports, are mainly concentrated in the district between Tounghoo and Ningyan, on the eastern bank and between Myinbunia and the oll frontier on the western bank. Other districts are officially reported comparatively quiet. Marauding parties of Shans give trouble on the east of Mandalay. One of these parties was severely punished by a force of Punjabee police, commanded by Lieutenant Gastrell. Whatever may be their present defects as policemen, the new Punjabee levies have proved themselves excellent fighting men. Boshway has announced to his followers that during the coming dry season he will avoid fighting, but will harass our marches. A strong force is being collected to crush Boshway.

Lieutenant-Colonel M'Iver, of the 5th Madras Native Infantry, died of sunstroke while commanding the column sent to relieve Major Meacham, who is at Thabyabin encumbered with sick. Lieutenant-Colonel M'Iver's column was delayed, but the force commanded by Colonel Whistloe is expected to reach Major

Meacham to-morrow.

Meacham to-morrow.

Relief works for 1,000 men have been opened in Mandalay.
Further works are in prospect. Four more persons injured at the relief depôt in Mandalay have died. The water is falling at Mandalay, and no further rise is expected.

CENTRAL ASIA.

CALCUTTA, SEPT. 26. The Afghan Frontier Commission will, it is expected, reach Cabul about the 10th of October, and India about a fortnight later. The Calcutta Englishman states that Colonel Lockhart's mission found that Manchester cotton goods had complete com-mand of the market in Ghilgit, Chitral, and even Wakhan, and sold at an average price of one rupes for five yards. Russian cotton seemed unknown, and what was not obtained from English sources was supplied locally or from Chinese Kashgar. They also found that American firearms were imported via Russian Turkestan, underselling English weapons from India. A good revolver from Cincinnati was purchased in Chitral for fifteen rupees.

BELOOCHISTAN.

CALCUTTA, SEPT. 26. Sir O St. John returned to Quetta on the 11th inst., after two months' tour, the principal object of which was to arrest Jam Ali, the rebel son of the Jam of Lus Beyla. Jam Ali, finding himself closely followed, took refuge with Navroz Khan, chief of the Khaian, by whom he was surrendered to a party of tribal levies sent by Sir O. St. John. He was brought to Quetta, arriving there on the 10th inst.

THE COMING INDIAN REFORMS.

TO THE EDITOR.

Sir,—I can assure you it is with feelings of the most unmitigated delight that I have been informed, on absolutely reliable authority, that great reforms are to be introduced into our Indian Empire, whereby enormous saving will result, and great contentment will be given to the now large mass of educated and intelligent Natives, a mass which is yearly becoming larger and larger, and more sensible of India's wants, and more alive to all her reasonable aspirations.

Lord Randolph Churchill said on 16th April, 1884, when delivering his Presidential address to the Midland Conservative Club in the Town Hall, Birmingham, that it was alike the duty and the pride of the Tory Democratic party "to rally the people throne and a patriotic people; that is our policy, and that is our faith." The cheers that this elicited are still ringing in my ears. Let the noble Lord now redeem this assertion, and lend all his aid and influence to carry out just reforms in India, reforms which are absolutely demanded if bankruptcy is not soon to overtake that overburdened country, and the 250,000,000 subjects who owe allegiance to our Queen-Empress will then form no small portion allegiance to our Queen-Empress will then form no small polynom of "the loyal peoples" who make up our vast Empire.

Sir, I would ask a little forbearance and space from you to call attention to the reforms proposed by the Bombay Chamber of Commerce, and the Government there, more especially so, as it is now about twenty years since I drew up a similar scheme and sent it to a magazine, but the editor returned it, saying it was too advanced to suit the readers of that magazine. Here are the advanced to suit the readers of that magazine. E heads of my scheme as proposed, I think, in 1865-6: 1st. The abolition of the separate Governments of Madras and

Bombay.
2nd. The abolition of the separate Commanders-in-Chief at

3rd. The abolition of all the Councils. Staff officers, and the enormous number of overpaid officials of every sort and kind connected with these Governments and armies.

4th. A complete reconstruction of all districts both as to the Civil and Military functionaries.

5th. India to be divided into thirteen provinces, with a Chief Commissioner or Lieutenant-Governor in each, and one General Officer to command the Troops. These officers to have salaries of £3,000 and £2,000 per annum respectively, their subordinates to be paid in proportion.

6th. The Native Armies to be thoroughly reorganised, and one General Military Code, not three Codes, published for all.

7th. The Viceroy and the Commander-in-Chief, with Councils, and a large body of delegates from the different (thirteen) provinces representing all interests of Europeans and Natives, commerce, trade, agricultural, forestry, and manufactures of every

8th. That all the local productions should be more thoroughly developed, and local manufacture largely stimulated.

There, Sir, are a few of the reforms I advocated nearly twenty years ago, and I find they are more than ever demanded now. We have in India, and I care not who says nay to this, a very large number of excellent Native fellow-subjects who are now quite capable of being trusted with a large share in the government of the country on the basis of that noble proclamation which, I think, was due to the ever-to-be-lamented Prince Consort.

H.R.H. the Prince of Wales is at the present moment proposing a scheme which, if honestly carried our, will go far to render these Indian reforms very easy to introduce, and by degrees to be made thereaftly sound and complete. I have not further leieure made thoroughly sound and complete. I have not further leisure to-day to say more, but if you will allow me I will next week say something further on these much-to-be-desired Indian reforms.

Your obedient servant,

A. R. GLOAG, Lieut.-General, Late Commanding R.A., B.B.D. 2, Tanfield Court, Inner Temple, E.C. 29th September, 1886.

THE FIXED RATIO.

TO THE EDITOR.

Sir, The fact that the Calcutta Chamber of Commerce has just memorialised in favour of bi-metallism lends a special interest to Mr. Clarmont Daniell's well-written article in the last National Review. But he does not seem to have done quite sufficient justice to the arguments of those who are in favour of "the fixed

He says, for example, that it is a fundamental article of this creed that law is "effective to fix a ratio of value." - Is that so ? Is it not rather their belief that—in the words of Mr. Gui dford Molesworth—" Legislation cannot fix a relative value between the two metals; but by combining them as joint standards at a fixed ratio it can set up an action, operating by the ordinary laws of suoply and demand, which preserves an equilibrium between the two metals at the ratio fixed." This statement of an energetic bimetallist is almost in the exact words of the Governor of the Bank of France, and seems to deserve Mr. Daniell's attention.

He goes on to attribute to the friends of the "ratio" an inference "that prices would not be affected, or confusion introduced into commerce, by the substitution of silver for gold." But neither is that their contention. What they assert is that bimetallism, when combined with unrestricted minting, has al ways acted like the balance of a chronometer; as soon as one metal becomes depreciated and begins to disappear, the other shrinds until the equilibrium is restored. This compensatory action is not a violation of the law of supply and demand, but is claimed as its necessary result.

Mr. Daniell urges that Gaudin, the Finance Minister of France in 1803, did not contemplate a fixed ratio because he said that whenever imperious circumstances arose it would be necessary to call in and re-coin the gold money. Now, whatever Gaudin may have thought a prudent precautionary clause, it so happened that such circumstances did not arise for about seventy years; that is, the so-called "intrinsic ratio" never altered more than between three and four tenths; and the fixed ratio was easily and profitably maintained. From 1821 to 1847 the coinage was 301g. to 2,778s.; from 1857 to 1866, on the contrary, it was 3,516g. to 55s. Yet the ratio remained almost the same when the production of gold was sixty-four times that of silver, as when it was only one-

The disturbance, which he seems to attribute to over-production, it is claimed, did not arise in the bi-metallic period; the ratio of production of gold to silver being greater now than that of silver to gold was when bi-metallism existed, and, it is said, was the cause of equilibrium.

"It remains to be shown," says Mr. Daniell, "that money is not merchandise." In one sense the bi-metallists admit that money is merchandise. It may be no more than a conventionalism.

money is merchandise. It may be no more than a conventionalism to treat it as anything else; still it is convenient to make a distinction between the thing measured, and the standard artificially created for its measurement. Money deriving its exact value from law becomes a common standard of value; and this is probably what those mean with whom Mr. Daniell finds fault for appealing to Aristotle. What the philosopher is quoted for, in this argument, is surely as a testimony that it is not as a thing bought that money is so peculiarly valued, but as an instrument of buying.

It is also hard upon M. de Laveleye to hint that he would like to make out that the French system of bi-metallism "sustained, if it did not create, a ratio of value between the two precious metals—whether in Europe, Asia, or America." What M. de-Laveleye is generally understood to mean is only that French bi-metallism acted as a buffer during the abnormal production of gold, from 1252 to 1856, so that silver only advanced 13 perounce. During that time France is said to have coined six millions in gold.

Mr. Daniell asserts that "no fixation of value between gold and silver was ever secured under the operation of the French currency law of 1803." But that does not seem to the purpose. He admits that the tendency of that law was to set up a created for its measurement. Money deriving its exact value

He admits that the tendency of that law was to set up a relative value, to fix "the exchange rate"; and that is all that is claimed for it.

"The Government," he adds, "could not fix the value of—one kind of money in the other." But that is what the French Government practically did do, and that for the long period of seventy years; nor was the relation of the two metals seriously disturbed till Germany, when glutted with the silver of the French ransom, excluded the white metal from her currency. This was followed by the French and American lawsdepriving silver of that unrestricted minting which is postulated as an essential of efficient bi-metallism.

He makes fun of Mr. A. C. Tupp, an Indian financier, for saying that it is noteworthy that, notwithstanding the increase in the quantity of the precious metals, they had nearly recovered their former value in 1880. Now, if Mr. Tupp meant that is was extraordinary that the increase in quantity was not so unfavourable to business as if business itself had not increased at the same time, it was "certainly strange" that he should have thought it worth while to make the remark. If, however, he meant—and I have no means of studying his actual expression—that the currency of the world was hardly adequate to its wants, he made a useful observation. And it may be added that if the two metals had not, owing to bi-metallism, acted for seventy years as a homogeneous mass the present depression in trade would have. been upon us so much the sooner.

Mr. Daniell concludes the first division of his undeniably cleverarticle in these words:—"I have stated with emphasis the distinction between a rate of exchange fixed by law and a rate of value fixed by law, because the distinction is very real, and because—if this distinction were more clearly realised—the belief which some fixed rationists so confidently assert, in their theory that law governs the value of gold and silver in one another, could not but undergo a considerable abatement." I do not know what some "fixed rationists" may assert; but I have shown that it is not necessary to their theory that bi-metallises along the solution of the solutio directly fixes the value of one metal in terms of another, though I believe they all contend that the French experiment established that hi metallism indirectly tends that way. Though the "intrinsic ratio" never absolutely coincided with that established by French law, the discrepancy was never excessive, and always disappeared in the long run. It was only when bi-metallism was tampered with in France and the United States, that the value of tampered with in France and the United States, that the value of silver underwent its great decline, which is still proceeding.

The remainder of the paper relates to the Indian aspect of the question, and is dealt with in a very practical spirit, which I have no pretension to emulate. Mr. Daniell concludes that England has only two alternaties. Either she must join a bimetallic union, which would lead to India draining her of gold, or she must make India accept her gold standard and thereby expose the bi-metallic union "to a similar danger of losing its gold." Into these regions of high speculation I cannot follow; but I would ask him to weigh this fact. In present conditions India imports gold in the proportion of three to five, and the stock of but I would ask him to weigh this fact. In present conditions India imports gold in the proportion of three to five, and the stock of gold (chiefly hoards and ornaments) now in the country is estimated at over one hurdred and fifty millions. When he asks:—"Is it not of the greatest importance that these vast unused stocks should be—restored as money to the commerce of the na ion?" we can only reply that it is so without a doubt; but we may, in our turn imagine whether a very hapful way of setting about the job may not be to reverse the conditions under which it has occurred that so much gold has been absorbed and rendered useless? rendered useless?

I do not conceive that, in any circumstances, there could be I do not conceive that, in any circumstances, there could be much increase in the demand for gold from India. The chief use of specie is to pay the wages of labour, and labour that earns from twopence to sixpence a day cannot be paid in gold. During ten years ending 1882.3 the net import of gold into India was near upon twenty millions sterling; increasing yearly as the value of silver fell. It may, therefore, be hoped that if silver were restored the importation of gold would diminish. At present, since the decline of the Rupee, it is the import of silver that has fallen off. Readers of Mr. Cotton's "Report" will remember that in times of scarcity more silver is coined in the member that in times of scarcity more silver is coined in the Indian mints than is imported during each year.

Lastly, the fact may be recorded—for whatever it may be worth—that the rise of the Rupee, which Mr. Daniell says reworth—that the rise of the Rupee, which Mr. Daniell says required a lapse of three hundred years to make good, really took a much less time. In the reign of Aurangzeb—say two centuries ago—the Rupee was only worth a livre and a half of French money—say fifteenpence—though its purchasing power, in the country, was very high as to commodities. At that time there was a very small importation of either of the precious metals, for there was very little sea trade at all. It was only when the East India Company becam to trade largely with India that the East India Company began to trade largely with India that the Rupee rose to its full value.

I think, on the whole, that we shall all do well to await the result of the promised Commission before we adopt any final conclusions on this momentous subject. I use the word "momentous" not in reference to the single subject of remittances from India to England, though I know that great thinkers are beginning to look on that subject with sincere anxiety. But I believe that the evil goes much further than this; and that it will be found that the depression of trade, with all its threatening consequences on the relations between capital and labour and between rulers and ruled, is caused by a remediable derangement in the pecuniary part of the machine.—Yours faithfully.

The introduction of rifles into the country, except by Government, being considered inexpedient, the Burmese Government have purchased the 200 rifles and bayonets imported by the American Baptist Mission Press at Rs. 15 each, the cost being charged to the police grant. Sanction has, however, been given to the Mission to import 200 muskets to be distributed amongst the Karen levies. Is this legitimate Mission work?

LIEUTENANT-GOVERNORSHIP OF THE N.W.P.—Sir Alfred Lyall's extension of service is still seriously disturbing those who, curiously enough, have least concern with it. The Indian Mirror, in a state of distraction, says :- "We are surprised to find that beyond an expression of great dissatisfaction with the rumoured extension in the columns of the leading Native newsrumoured extension in the columns of the leading Native newspaper of the North-Western Provinces, the Indian Union, no steps have yet been taken to express popular disapproval of the contemplated jobbery. The people of the North-Western Provinces have now public bodies to represent their views. What are they doing? Are they asleep, or are the people themselves afraid to move in the matter because of the displeasure of Sir Alfred Lyall they are sure to incur? In that case the sooner they abolish their public associations, and the less they speak of their public spirit, the better."

RETRENCHMENTS IN MILITARY EXPENDITURE IN MADRAS.

(Madras Times.)

The Government of India recently addressed Local Governments touching the possibility of a reduction in military expenditure, and strongly urging the Madras Government to take the subject of economy in regard to military charges incurred in this Presiof economy in regard to military charges incurred in this Presidency into careful consideration, in view to a the rough investigation of all details of expenditure. In accordance with the instructions of the Government of India, the local Government called at once on controlling officers to carefully review the entires expenditure of their respective departments, both in regard to establishments and supplies; to indicate the direction in which reductions might be effected, to carry out such retrenchments as might be practicable; and to show why larger reductions were not feasible. At the same time, the Government did not intripate any appreciable results as the question of expenditure came. any appreciable results, as the question of expenditure cameranually under review in connection with the budget estimate, and, further, was a subject which the Government had constantly and the constantly are the constantly and the constantly are the constantly and the constantly are the constantl before them. It has been pointed out that, as a rule, the milita y establishments in this Presidency are maintained on the lowest scales consistent with efficiency. The reports received from the scales consistent with efficiency. The reports received from the several heads of the military establishments confirm the anticipations of Government. The Adjutant-General cannot suggest any economy in his department. The Quartermaster-General shows that in neither the general nor the barrack branches of his department is there room for retrenchment, and points out that the excess of barrack expenditure in this Presidency, to which attention has pointedly been drawn by the Government of India, is more apparent than real. The system followed in Madras exhibits in the military budget the entire cost under this head, including regimental conservancy, and so keeps it prominently in view; whereas in Bengal and Bombay a considerable portion of barrack charges is met from the Public Works grant, while all conservancy is treated as regimental outlay. The Judge Advocate-General reports that no reductions are feasible in his department; but Government are not satisfied that economy is not practicable, and purpose keeping the subject still in view. The Commissary-General is unable to suggest any reductions in the fixed establishment; but suggests that no outlay be incurred this year on a count of transport cattle in this Presidency or in Burna, where the capture of a large number of elephants and ponies will meet departmental wants. This will reduce the budget provision of Rs. 1,10,600 to Rs. 20,000, thus realising Rs. 90,600. The scores laid. up at Quetta being utilised for Burma has obviated an expenditure of Rs. 2,35,530; the non-replacement in ordinary strength of the-Madras Bearer establishment sent to Burma, gives an annual saving of Rs. 22,176, and the probable transfer of five elephants to the Mysore Government will result in another saving of Rs. 1,241. As regards the Superintendent of Family Pensions, there was recently a proposal to coange the system of payments of pensions with a view to economy; but the proposal does not now commend itself to Government. The traditions, customs, family and social relations of the Native races composing the Coast Army demand special arrangements for the important, and often delicate duties discharged by the executive of this department; the acceptance of the existing system by all classes is the strongest evidence. of its peculiar suitability, and affords a very cogent argument against changes based exclusively on financial considerations. The Superintendent of the Reserve and Remount Depo, Hosur, reports that increased, and not reduced, expenditure, must necessarily be soon incurred. The numbers and description of horses to be purchased are annually fixed by the Government of India, under whose authority a higher price is now given. The cost of keep, &c., being higher both at the Depôt and in regiments than in Depot and the depot keep, &c., being higher both at the Depot and in regiments than in Bengal, the matter is now receiving attention in the Miditary Accounts Department. In the Medical Department, the Surgeon-General, H M.'s Forces, anticipates a saving of Rs. 17,975 during the current year in "Hospital Supplies," and estimates at Rs. 11,88,736 the minimum expenditure in the year on account of the Army Medical Service. The Principal Medical Store Keeper cannot suggest any modification involving a saving in face-stablishment. but propuges measures for the dayposal of the large stock ment; but proposes measures for the disposal of the large stock of obsolete and surplus instruments. Government have approved of this, and have requested him to take action accordingly. Price lists of class books in store should be furnished to the Principal Medical College, for the information of the students, to whom issues have been ordered to be made at reduced rates, it necessary.

AN INCREASE IN THE INCOME-TAX. (Indian Planters' Gazette.)

If the Government of Indialimagines that it can screw another anna out of the Income-tax, it must have arrived at the condition of those old pagans whom their god, first made mad before they promptly descroyed. Politically, the Income-tax is a blunder which ought never to have been perpetra ed. Financially, it is a failure of the first magnitude; and instead of making good the loss from exchange—that is, seething the kid in the blood of its parent, it has only reached a fraction of the sum which the elderly gentlemen who haunt the slopes of Jacko hoped it would. Where is the complimentary fraction to come from? If the councillors of the Indian Government think that the long-suffering planter, the tradesmen in despair over falling exchange, the exiled European, official and non-official, with wife and children in England, are likely to provide the means of preserving the Indian Government from a yearly deficit, they are, we venture to think, very seriously mistaken. The burdens which Europeans in India have to bear are greater to day than at any previous period in the history of India. In days gone by a moderately careful man could secure a confortable independence in a reasonable number of years. The planter and the tradesman and the merchant are now handicapped in a way which none of their predecessors ever experienced; and the struggle for existence in India is now a hard one, and is yearly becoming more intensified. Any hope which Europeans in India may place on bi-metallism helping them in their difficulties may, we think, be dismissed at once. England will not change its currency at an immense possible loss in order to rehabilitate silver-using countries, unless some very distinct changes pass over the commercial understanding of the bulk of Englishmen. Bi-metallism is a beautiful theory, a delightful series of transcendental possibilities, but human nature is a peculiar factor which will not always fit into theories, however lovely and however abstractly correct and most desirable they may be. Like the decimal systems of coinage, which for the last thirty years enthusiasts have never failed to hold up, and with reason hold up, as the simplest and most desirable they may be. Like the decimal systems of coinage, which for the last thirty years enthusiasts have never failed to hold up, and with reason hold up, as the simplest and most desirable for England, bi-metallism will continue to be advocated by earnest souls who will have considerab

PERJURY IN INDIA.

(Englishman.)

Among other difficulties which stand in the way of prosecutions for perjury and false accusation in India is the want of public spirit on the part of those who are the most immediate sufferers from this commonest of Indian crimes. Possibly a fellow-feeling makes the victims wondrous kind, and the use of perjury by both sides is the cause of a certain coyness in pressing for sanction to private prosecutions. This objection, however, can rarely apply to the cases, not uncommon in planting districts, where an Englishman is made the victim of malicious charges of crime, or is subjected to the annoyance of having his case prejudged and prejudiced, while still sub judice by unscrupulous prints. In such cases, where the individual victim is too poor to venture into the arena of litigation, the Defence Association might make it its business to procure a prosecution. It may be said that it is the business of the Magistrate or Judge before whom the perjury was committed to take the first step. But judicial officers, however practised and discriminating, have their foibles, and one of these may be a disinclination to sanction a prosecution unless the false accusation is very palpable, and so grossly improbable as to leave little chance of an acquittal. It is a natural and even commendable weakness, and we cannot blame them for not wishing to waste the time of their associates or subordinates in the investigation of charges which are difficult of proof, and may result in an acquittal which, if not honourable, will be satisfactory to the perjure, and an encouragement to his numerous followers.

Yet, surely, this train of reasoning must lead to the escape of the more cunning rogues, while it is only the baser sort, the wretched coolies who cannot afford the professional assistance of the petition-writer and the tout, who will fall victims to their inexperience, and be laughed at by the more wily practitioner. Until Government is able to appoint public prosecutors for this class of cases, it behoves private persons to do all in their power to bring perjury to light and to punishment. Another difficulty in the way of successful prosecutions for perjury is the smallness of the judicial staff; especially in planting districts, where the population is often small and scattered, and the number of administrators of the law proportionately scanty. To this result the establishment of sub-divisions has largely conduced. A sub-division is often left in charge of a Magistrate of only second-class powers. If he has the larger powers of the first class, he cannot try those guilty of false complaints made to himself; and he may well hesitate before he sends complainant, witnesses, and accused to march sixty or seventy miles to the nearest Magistrate having jurisdiction, unless he has a very clear and obvious case before him. This is an evil which cannot now be avoided. It makes it, however, the more necessary to press home all such charges where any chance of a conviction exists.

THE NEW GOVERNOR OF MADRAS. (Madras Mail.)

This Presidency may be congratulated upon the selection which Lord Salisbury has made for the Governorship of Madras. Mr. Robert Bourke is not a stranger to Madras, for he visited it in the year 1871, and he has had the advantage of hearing a good deal about it from his younger brother, Major Bourke, a former Postmaster-General. He is identified with India, chiefly on account of his relationship to the Earl of Mayo, and in a less degree by reason of his wife being a daughter of the Marquis of Dalhousie. Lord Mayo visited Madras in November, 1869, when on his way from England to relieve Lord Lawrence at Calcutta. He attended the ball given at the Banqueting Hall by Lord Napier, in honour of the Prince of Wales's birthday, and it was noticed that he towered a head and shoulders over almost all the other guests, though men do not run small here as they do at Allababad, and other degenerate places in the North. The Chamber of Commerce interviewed him at Guindy, with the lamented Mr. Byard as its head, and the members came away greatly impressed by the courteous manner and shrewd sense of the Viceroy Designate. A London paper says that Mr. Bourke "resembles his brother (the Viceroy) in the gifts of a genial presence and commanding manner, and there is no doubt that Ootacamund and Madras will be brightened by his advent." The Daily News, a partisan journal, strongly opposed to the politics professed by Mr. Bourke, says that he is a "courtly, cultured, and honest man;" that his qualities are not "showy," but he has "sterling merit and aptitude for business;" and that "Madras will be pleased with him," as he "may be counted upon to renew and knit closer the friendly feelings that exist between all classes of the population of India, and the House of Bourke." The Standard considers that he has displayed just that "combination of tact and firmness which fits a man for Government." He has personal claims of his own, which would have pointed him out for high preferment of some kind, had he been the first of his family to achieve political distinction. In the financial position which he occupied at Constantinople in the interests of the Turkish bondholders he showed himself "an equally good man of business." He was considered one of the best Chairmen of Private Committees in the House of Commons; while by his travels in India and Asia Minor "he has acquired a practical knowledge of the East such as few Governors carry out with them." It may fairly be presumed that 'the governing faculty so conspicuous in Lord Mayo is to some extent hereditary in the descendants of the successor of Strongbow, and that in this respect Mr. Bourke will prove himself no degenerate scion of the race. With the lighter qualifications appropriate to the new dignity he is abundantly endowed, and his genial disposition and high breeding are sure to make him popular "with all classes of society in India." The Morning Advertiser considers that he has earned his position "meritoriously," and is "likely to do honour to his selection."

Mr. Bourke would the refere seem to be the two of men readed.

Mr. Bourke would therefore seem to be the type of man needed to pour oil on the ruffled waters of Madras. Sir M. E. Grant Duff has been unfortunate in his own deficiencies, and in those of the persons around him. He was ill advised to try, as a square man, to fill a round hole. He is probably a better scholar, and in some respects more gifted than his successor, but he has all along laboured under the want of the geniality, tact, and knowledge of human nature, which are instinctive in some men, and are never acquired by others. It was a cruel conjuncture of circumstances that gave him as advisars good men in their way, but not men good enough to meet the exceptional demands of their position. But the Madras public has not a long memory for administrative failures. It lives in the present, and makes the best of it. Things have not been as bad as it has suited the Pioneer with unblushing audacity to allege; but they have not been sans reproche; and Mr. Bourke, as his brother did in Calcutta, will probably soon show those near him that if he wears a silken glove it covers an iron hand. Madras wants rest—rest from Crole cases, from Processional horses, from Richings estates, and unseemly worries of that sort; and she wants to get full justice done to the progress that she is quietly making one way and another, despite the vagaries of some of those in authority over her. She does not want an "Admirable Crichton" as her Governor; but she needs a man of the workaday world, who habitually takes a broad, wise, and generous view of public affairs; and, like the Duke of Buckingham, does not look beyond Madras as long as he is identified with her history.

THE DWINDLING RUPEE.

(Bombay Gazette.)

Mr. W. Birkmyre, of Glasgew and Calcutta, has at least the courage of his opinions as to the infinite advantage which this country derives from having a currency of more than aquæous instability. The proposition that India profits from every fall in the value of the rupee has been stated with much confidence and much ingenuity in East and West, but so far as we know Mr. Birkmyre has beaten everyone else hollow in that matter. A controversalist indeed, who faces cheerfully the contingency of the rupee ceasing to have any value at all, and of India ceasing to have a currency, may be said to have beaten the record for calmness of faith in the contemplation of disastrous potentialities. We are comforted, of course, by knowing that in the nature of things this bottomless depth in which Mr. Birkmyre's imagination has for our comfort been disporting itself will never be reached. Silver will have its value even when the arguments of those who thus confidently muse upon its coming valuelessness will have lost theirs. We only dwell upon such speculations as these to show how far optimism à outrance may carry clever men. For, carried thus far, it is impossible that they should do justice to considerations nearer at hand. When Mr. Birkmyre muses over the good time coming when the Indian Government may find it to their advantage to remit their Home charges, not by the sale of Council drafts, but by shipping produce on their own account, he is taken far away from the hard fate of Indian officials and others who lose heavily in sending to England a part of the money that they have hardly earned in this country. He is good enough to sympathise with them, it is true, but his kindest messages to these unhappy people are calculated to provoke no more grateful retort than the "Hang your sympathy, why don't you buy a pie!" of the old story. Mr. Birkmyre will not "buy a pie," but he gives the sufferers a lecture upon their lack of foresight in ever coming to a country in which they took a risk of losing or gaining. As though to ever sore trial to those others over the way, everybody else may welcome it as an opportunity for waxing fat. If that is so let us hope it will be largely made use of. But it is only Maltese goats which, with the help of green spectacles, are said in unveracious anecdote to be able to graze upon the barren rock, and Mr. Birkmyre's Indian audiences will not thrive the more for being told that because silver has gone down they must be more prosperous than ever they were.

Of course Mr. Birkmyre has no consideration for Mr. O'Conor's much-discussed memorandum, or for any other arguments of "the usual official type." These, it seems, hoodwink the public by telling of "purely illusory losses" by exchange—purely illusory because Indian financiers value the rupee in their statements at the fanciful rate of two shillings. But even illusory losses are not to be wiped out by illusory arguments. The proof of loss to the Government of India from the fall in silver depends upon no conventional estimate value of the rupee. Whether it be taken at two shillings or at one and six, as it is in this year's estimate, there is still a deficit which cannot be argued away. A Budget which has to provide for gold payments amounting to fourteen millions sterling with a revenue in currency which, since the estimate on which it is based was framed, has fallen from one-and-sixpence per rupee less than one-and-fourpence-halfpenny, shows no illusory loss. The shrinkage in the value of our currency has at all events been serious enough to make of no effect the economies which the financial Committee have for three months past been industriously devising in all directions. Is this, then, an illusory loss or a very substantial one, embarrassing to the Government who have to meet not diminishing but growing demands, with a shrinking currency, and to everyone else in India who has to meet charges beyond sea? Here, however, we are content to deal with the problem, and with Mr. Birkmyre's contribution to its solution as a financial rather than an economic problem. Sir Auckland Colvin reminded us six months ago that Indian finance and Indian administrative advancement and improvement have become questions of currency. "Not so," we almost hear Mr. Birkmyre say, "you can at least fall back upon batter when the worst comes to the worst." There need be no alarm whatever, he tells us. There is the ancient method practised in India of taking a proportion of the produce of the land as rent. This may be sent to Europe for

We venture to think that it is not by means of pleading of this sort that the English public will be persuaded of the precious benefits of monetary instability. Nor is it by means of calculations tending to show how much it would profit India if the rupee went down another sixpence that the growing demand for measures tending to arrest this decline will be satisfied. The calculations are vitiated to begin with by a strange forgetfulness of the fact that the depreciation of silver carries with it as a necessary corollary the appreciation of gold. "If an Indian merchant," he says, "thirty-seven miles from a railway, sends his wheat to Marklane, and gets 30s. a-quarter for, say a thousand quarters of wheat, for which he recei es £1,500, with a portion of this, say £100, he pays freight and all charges, and supposing he does not wish to buy piece-goods or any other atticle of European manufacture—that he wants to buy silver or Council dratts with the balance of £1,400, when silver is 46d. per ounce, or 1s. 6d. per rupee. In exchange for this £1,400 deposited at the India Office he receives from the Treasury in India 18,677 rupees. When exchange fals from 1s. 6t. to 1s., or silver from 46l. to 31d. per ounce, he receives in exchange for his £1,400 deposited at the India." Of course he can, if silver can fall and gold can be unaffected by its fall. But wheat which would fetch 30s. a quarter when the rupee was at 1s. 6d. must not be assumed to be worth as much when the rupee stands at a shilling, and it is upon this wrong assumption that the greater part of Mr. Birkmyre's argument rests. "All Indian produce sent to England, whether direct or through the aid of intermediaries," is, upon his own a mission, sold for gold, and it is because he and others who have come to the same concusion ignore what may be called the gold factor in the silver problem that the notion that India profics by the fall in exchange has gained so wide a reception. They confound increase in bulk and in rupee value with increase in value in the c

THE MADRAS SCANDALS.

(Times of India.)

The Crole case lies in a nutshell. As Collector of Madura Mr. Crole was consulted by a Zemindar in his district who had been asked to purchase an estate from the son of the Hon. Mr. Sullivan, Senior Member of Caucal, for the sum of Rs. 1,25,000. Mr. Crole looked into the business, as he was indeed bound to do. He found that the estate was valued by an expert at Rs. 25,000 only, and that it belonged in reality not to the son, a penniless youth and that it belonged in reality not to the son, a penniless youth who had just lost his appointment in the police because he could not pass in language, but to the father, the Senior Member of Council. Headvised the Zemindar to cry off the bargain, and he mentioned the negotiations to the Calef Secretary. Charges against a Senior Member of Council cannot, of course, be idly brought. Mr. Crole was, therefore, requested to report the substance of what he knew in writing for the confidential use of the Governor, and he did this so effectively that Mr. Grant Duff removed him from the Collectorate of Madura, and suspended him from the Madras Civil Service for a twelvementh. He was told that his accusations were the outcome of his "painfully morbid vanity," and that he had "an overweening estimate of his own merits almost beyond the bounds of sane reason." We need not stop to ask Sir M E. Grant Duff for a definition of "insane reason," but will hurry on to the point when, suspended and apparently ruined, Mr. Crole was again charged, more or less directly, with having instigated a murderous Native attack upon a brother civilian, to whom he might possibly be supposed to owe a grudge in connection with his suspension. This charge, though gravely entertained by a local Judge, was entirely disproved by the Madras High Court, and Mr. Crole's friends, as he had already appealed to the Government of India and the Secretary of State, now determined to appeal to the public. We are often told by self-satisfied officials that there is no public opinion in India, that owing to climatic influences it is asleep or that peradventure it is on furlough. Nothing could be more untrue. Anglo-Indian opinion is sleepy no doubt, but once roused it is, everything before it. In the Crole case it happens to have been thoroughly awakened. Mr. Crole was probably a hot-headed, frascible, irrepressible man. But he was an individual, and when the Madras Government attempted to crush him for trying to show that some of their membors were illegally jobbing in land, it became a question of fair-play. To quote "Junius" against S r E. M. Grant Duff is to use a steam-hammer to crush a filbert. We will quot gently, not more than three or four lines:—"A Government blameless or ill-advised enough to treat with discassed the chiracter with the chiracter w regard the obligation due to public services, not only sets a most regard the colligation due to public services, not only sets a most pernicious example to its subjects, but does a flagrant injury to society which every member of it ought to resent." That is exactly what the public did in the Crole case. The incisive papers in the Pioneer in which his grievances were exposed form one of the strongest indictments we have ever come across in the Indian Press. They were simply irresistible, they were supported by articles in every journal of any influence throughout the country, and they forced the Indian Office to take action. Lord Kimberley, who was obviously not very auxious to interfere with the action of the Governor of very anxious to interfere with the action of the Governor of Madras, was compeled to deal with it before leaving the India Office to his successor. In a dispatch, dated the 29th July, he requests that Mr. Crole may be at once reinstated in the Madras Civil Service, and be given an office of the same rank and emolument as that he had lost. Incidentally Lord Kimberley says that Mr. Sullivan, senior, undoubtedly had a substantial interest in the estate, and that even as regards a mere rumour Mr. Crole was quite justified in calling the attention of Government to it. He quite justined in calling the attention of Government to it. He erred, however, in using strong linguage. For that reason he will not recover his arrears of pay, though the time under suspension will, nevertheless, count for service. This is, we suppose, a salve to the vanity, morbid or otherwise, of Sir M. E. Grant Duff, and as he is on the point of retiring it does not much matter to anyone except Mr. Crole, who loses more than half a year's pay. Mr. Crole, however, did use strong language, and as he seems from his correspondence to dearly love a fight, we do not suppose from his correspondence to dearly love a fight, we do not suppose he regrets the rupees. Probably when he looks back upon his victory he will regard the money it cost him as the pleasantest investment he ever made.

Here, fortunately for himself, we had a man perfectly ready to hit back, with a friend who could hit hard too. We had a sympathetic Press and an indignant public. But had Mr. Crole been troubled with diffidence or nervousness his career would have been ruined, and no one would have heard of his wrongs. The Crole case, however, is happily over, and now forms one of the two incidents in the Indian career of Sir M. E. Grant Duff. A weak Governor and the chance of making money tempted the A weak Governor and the chance of making money tempted the Madras Civilians into speculations that have in the long run been disastrous. The gold-mining mania of a few years back tempted many of the officials to dabble in land speculation, and the present Governor seems to have been weak enough to allow them to continue their illicit practices till a most influential portion of the Service has been thoroughly demoralised. In a letter printed a couple of days since in our Allahabad contemporary, a planter and nursery gardener at Ootacanund says that with the explanter and nursery gardener at Ootacamund says that with the exception of the Governor the whole of the personnel of the Government of Madras were his rivals in growing cinchous plants. Four of them, he says, had thirty acres of plantations each, and the Natives naturally preferred to purchase from persons in high official position. "I estimate," he continues, "that Messrs Sulhivan, Master, Grigg, and Colonel Shaw Stewart had, in 1882, each thirty acres under cultivation. That is, they averaged that Covenanted Civil Servants, prohibited by the Secretary of State to cultivate, had in that year 700,000 trees out. Their estimated annual yield, when in full bearing, would be 3½ lakhs of rupees, i.e., £30,000 about. They sold in 1852 half a million seedlings." Mr. Sullivan's conduct was not before the Secretary of State when the Crole case was decided, but the way in which Madras civilians have trafficked in land is now, thanks to Mr. Crole and his friends, very prominently before the Indian public. Sir M. E. Grant Duff has been too weak to put a stop to a system that has led not only to a grave public scandal, but to interminable squabbles and much injustice in the Service itself. The Right Hon. Robert Bourke will have all his work cut out for him when he arrives at Madras if he wishes to rescue the Presidency from the effects of his predecessor's régime.

BENGAL.

THE death is announced of Mr. H. G. Wilkins, Officiating Deputy Commissioner of Police, in Calcutta. He had been suffering for some weeks from liver complaint, but did not seem to be seriously ill till complications set in, and the disease terminated fatally. His loss will be deplored by a large circle of friends, to many of whom his sudden death will be a painful shock.

Ir is believed that the post of Additional Deputy Commissioner of the Calcutta Police, where the work is said to have heavily increased, will be continued until the question of the Commissioner holding two separate appointments is finally disposed of by the Local Goovernment.

BAAU POTRAB CHUNDER MOZUMDAR announces in the columns of the Liberal that the Government of Lord Dufferin is contemplating various measures to put the Native Indian public in possession of facts that may serve for a sounder basis of criticism than is generally offered at present.

HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN has presented the library of the Allyghur Mahommedan Anglo-Oriental College with the two books of her travels in the Highlands of Scotland.

DURING the year 1885 the sum of Rs. 4,78,450 was spent by Native gentlemen in the Bengal Provinces on wells, public tanks, roads, &c., compared with Rs. 5,11,855 in 1884, and Rs. 2,17,142 in 1883. In the course of a resolution on the subject, the Lieutenant-Governor remarks that the number of voluntary contributions thus made by Native gentlemen, for works of public utility, is again large, and falls but little short of the figures for last year, which were unusually high. The works which have been constructed at so considerable a cost will, it is hoped, prove of lasting benefit to the people, and Sir Rivers Thompson notices with much pleasure the public spirit and liberality of the many donors who have contributed such large sums for the benefit of the people.

THE Inspector-General of Jails explains the cause of the high mortality in the Bengal jails last year. This year was a very unhealthy one, owing to the unusually heavy rainfall, and consequently malarial fever was very common. Under the heading of "Remittent and Continuous Fever" there was a very large decrease in the number of cases, but the attacks seem to have been unusually severe, as no less than 92.7 per thousand prisoners deid from them, as against 39.7 in 1884. A special committee, composed of Drs. Cleghorn, Joubert, and Clarke, was specially appointed to inquire into an outbreak of this disease at the Alipore Jail. The inquiry proved that cerebro spinal meningitis had prevailed in many certs of India in itsile and allowed. had prevailed in many parts of India in jails, and also on board emigrant ships, without being recognised as a disease distinct from remittent fever, with which it has often been confounded. The committee were of opinion that defective ventilation and the crowding together of large bodies of human beings are most likely to favour the development of such a disease.

MADRAS

IT is understood that Mr. H. B. Grigg, Director of Public Instruction, Madras, is not likely to return to India immediately after the expiry, in November next, of his present leave to Europe. He may have his leave extended to the early part of next year. This will extend Dr. Duncan's acting tenure of his present appointment.

A curious case is at present occupying the attention of the Madras High Court. Some time ago an application was made to the acting district magistrate for a summons against a shopkeeper for receiving in pawn the medals of two Sepoys of the 30th Madras Infantry. The magistrate was not satisfied that the shopkeeper had a summon and the shopkeeper for receiving in pawn the magistrate was not satisfied that the shopkeeper for receiving the shopkeeper for t Madras Infantry. The magistrate was not satisfied that the shop-keeper had committed a punishable offence, and refused the summons. Thereupon Mr. Powell, the acting Government Pleader, on behalf of the Crown, petitioned the High Court against the order of the magistrate, arguing that the law provided for the punishment of a civilian receiving in pawn military decorations. Their Lordships, however, seemed so have come doubt on the point, and took time to consider their decision.

AFTER being in communication with the Judges of the Madras High Court, the Local Government has come to the conclusion that it would be a matter of some difficulty to satisfactorily frame-a detailed scale of fees for Government pleaders in Civil cases, but that there appears no reason why pleaders appearing on behalf of Government should get other than the regulation fees prescribed in the case of pleaders for private parties. It has accordingly been ruled that in cases decided in favour of Government, the full regulation feeshall be paid to their pleaders, which fee will be recoverable in execution as part of the costs incurred by Government, and in cases in which the decision is against Government half-fees will, in view of the retaining fee, be allowed. In exceptional cases, however, highest rates will be allowed, if so recommended by the Collector.

An advertisement appears in a Southern India paper for "A smart East Indian Laly of good attainments, age about fifteen years, to be the wife of a non-employed Brahmin, who has now become a Christian."

An interesting and important question under the Christian Marriage Act lately came before the Madras High Court. The point arose out of an alleged illegal marriage performed by a man named Podujan Isaac, between two persons, Selvum, a girl, seventeen years of age, and a man named Vadamuthu. It was alleged that the girl was a Christian, and that under section 68 of the Christian Marriage Act Podujan Isaac had acted illegally in marrying her. A charge was breught against the man by the Rev. A. Margoschis, S.P.G., missionary in charge of the Nazareth Mission, Tenkasai Taluq, Tinnevelly, but the magistrate dismissed the case, holding (1) that it was not proved that the accused had celebrated the marriage, and (2) that as a fact the girl Selvum, at the time of and prior to her marriage, had definitely made up her mind to renounce the Christian religion. The accused was accordingly discharged.

BOMBAY.

HIS ROYAL HIGHNESS THE DUKE OF CONNAUGHT will pay a visit ta Poona about the end of this month, and the local municipality will present a loyal address to his Royal Highness on the occasion. It is also reported that the municipality contemplate requesting his Royal Highness to perform the opening ceremony of the now Municipal Market.

SIR STEUART BAYLEY will, the Secunderabad paper states, visit Hyderabad before he embarks for Europe on his six months' leave. He is expected there on the 18th ult., and will probably remain two days. Sir Steuart visits Hyderabad, it is said, to take leave of his many old friends there, whom he may not have a chance of seeing again, as on his return he will have to proceed direct to his Government.

The season reports for the past week show that there has been fair rain everywhere in the Bombay Presidency except Sind, but more is still wanted in the Dharwar and Poona districts. The standing crops are in good condition almost everywhere. The crops have, however, been injured by excessive rain in parts of Ahmednugger, Surat, and the Panch Mahals.

THE officer holding for the time being the appointment of Agent to the Governor-General at Baroda has been invested with the powers of a Sessions Judge, and is empowered to exercise such powers in the cantonment of Baroda. Lieut.-Colonel W. S. Peat, Second Assistant to the Governor-General's Agent at Baroda, has been invested with the ordinary powers of a first-class magistrate.

THE Moulvie who was recently deported for preaching sedition in the Mecca Musjid of Hyderabad is, the Secunderabad paper states, reported to have taken up his quarters in a remote corner of his Highness the Nizam's Dominions, and has there resumed his "little game." Orders have, however, been issued with respect to him that will effectually put a stop to his finding again an audience in the Hyderabad State.

LORD RIPON writing to Mr. B. M. Malabari from Carlton Gardens, S.W., on the 13th ult., says:—"I am very glad to learn that you are making progress with the social questions in which you take so deep an interest. As I wrote to you from Simla in August, 1884, I fully sympathies with every attempt to ameliorate the condition of women in India, and you have my best wishes for the success of your efforts in this direction. I trust that the day is not far distant when the reforms which you advocate will be accomplished, and I do not hesitate to say that the effect of their adoption upon public opinion in England will be of the best kind."

THE Uncovenanted Service Association, which was started recently at Simla, promises to be successful. No fewer than 300 members at Simla alone have signified their intention of joining. The association is intended to promote the interests of the uncovenanted service at large, but it may also take cognizance of individual interests where they are identical with those of the service.

THE Punjab Chief Court has asked for more time to consider, or rather to re-consider, the Panjab Revenue and Tenancy Bills. More time has been granted, and the passing of the bills will be postponed till next spring.

PREPARATIONS for working the coal seams on the salt range are progressing rapidly. It is expected that by the end of the current year they will be completed. The working of the seams will, however, be carried on laterally from the sides of the range where the coal crops up above the ground, and the coal will be conveyed to the North-Western Railway by means of a branch line and a wire tramway. A considerable quantity of coal has already been excavated and experimented upon, and has been found of excellent quality.

Miscellaneous.

Official reports from Upper Burma for the week ending 29th August show the northern districts to be generally quiet and in good order. The authority of the local officers and revenue collections are being gradually extended. Cultivation is going on everywhere. The crops generally are looking well. Mandalay town is very quiet. The previous reports as to the extent of the injury done by the floods are confirmed. Little actual damage appears to have been inflicted. There is no real distress. Measures have been taken to feed people who have suffered. During the past fourteen days 3,000 people received relief. The districts of the cen ral division are gradually settling down. The crop prospects are fair. Four new posts have been established in the Ava, Kyanks, Shwebo and Yen districts. The Myingyan district has been quieter during the past week. Nimbu, Ningyan and Yemethen are still unsettled, but there a e signs of improvement.

Comparing the income of the Indian Government for the first month of the current financial year with that received during the corresponding period of 1885-86, we find from the last issue of the Gazette of India that a considerable decrease has taken place in the land revenue (£86,000), guaranteed companies, assessed taxes, and provincial rates, while there has been a similar increase from State railways, opium, salt and forest. The increase in the income from the State railways is the most notable, amounting to £124,100. As for the expenditure, while an increase is noted under salt, land revenue, and the working expenses of State railways, there is a considerable decrease under opium, political charges, and the capital outlay on State railways and irrigation works. On the whole, income has increased by £56,700 and expenditure decreased by £391,300.

Mr. Alderman Birchenough, the president of the Macclesfield Chamber of Commerce, has received a letter from Mr. Thomas Waidle, of the Government of India and Royal Commission Office of Indian Silk Culture, stating, "on the authority of the Prime Minister, that the Government intend to give an early attention to the depressed state of the silk trade of England, with the intention of ascertaining what steps can be taken to improve it," and inquiring whether the Macclesfield Chamber will be willing to co-operate with him (Mr Wardle)—at whose suggestion the inquiry is to take place—in affording the Government the requisite facilities. Mr. Birchenough has replied, expressing his pleasure at the intention of the Government, and promising the co-operation of the Macclesfield Chamber, a deputation from which some months ago gave evidence before the Royal Commissioners on Trade Depression.

In reference to the exposure of the Madras scandals the Bombay Gazette says:—"The indignation of the Madras Mail at the zeal with which the Pioneer has held forth upon administrative scandals in the Southern Presidency is hard to comprehend. No one who wishes to speak fairly upon the subject would even insinuate that the offence of the Pioneer is merely that of having stolen its contemporary's thunder. The Mail was careful to let the world know months ago that the papers in the Crole case were at its disposal, but that a regard for Mr. Crole's interest constrained it to refrain from publishing them. The Madras paper is therefore secure against any suggestion of that sort. If it has teen jealous it has been with anything but a journalistic jealousy. Its loyalty to the Madras Presidency, and to the Madras Administration which goes on while Governors and Members of Council come and go, has led it to protest against a washing of dirty linen which brings into disfavour other names than those of Mr. Grant Duff and Mr. Sullivan and Mr. H. S. Thomas. But after all, the public owes something to the severe yet useful indiscretions of the Pioneer's correspondent. He has at least put in evidence the pieces d'accusation against the Madras Government, documents to which Mr. Grant Duff, we may be sure, would not have given any more publicity than he was obliged. Whether the correspondent's inferences were not too general and too sweeping is another matter. The Mail may be pardoned for refusing to believe that the service in Madras is the corrupt, unholy, and altogether disreputable society that the Pioneer's correspondent tried to lead people to believe it to be. And yet the Allahabad paper has done the public some service; perhaps it has done a greater service to the official community whose shortcomings it has so severely exhibited."

THE COLONIAL AND INDIAN EXHIBITION.

HIS ROYAL HIGHNESS THE PRINCE OF WALES has decided that the present Exhibition shall close on the evening of Wednesday, November 10th, and the question is now being discussed in man y directions, and in various lights. whether the show shall be opened again under similar conditions next year, or whether it shall be merged into the larger and permanent form of an Imperial Institute as suggested by his Royal Highness in his letter to the Lord Mayor. As regards the former proposal it is believed that the Colonial Governments and exhibitors will approve; provided that the cost be not too heavy on their finances, and that as regards the exhibit and sale of certain industries-especially that of wine-Australia shall have fairer play than she is said to have received during the present Exhibition. So far as India is concerned, her approval will possibly be taken for granted, although even in the Indian sections there have been complaints and some fault-finding as to supposed privileges also. But so little is yet known, and so little interest is still taken in the resources of our great Empire in the East, that any arrangement, whereby a more extended and intelligent knowledge of those vast resources can be secured for Englishmen at home, will be welcomed as an advance in the right direction.

Of course, there are clamours against the continuance of the Exhibition upon any terms. It is said that it competes with private enterprises, in which much capital has been invested to cater for the public amusement, on terms unfair to the latter; that it is almost a State-supported show, whereas the theatres, concerts, and other places of entertainment have to depend for success upon the enterprise and money of private individuals. The complaint that injury has been done to theatrical speculations is not a new one; it was brought forward from the time of the first of these Exhibitions at South Kensington. But the answer has been given, and it is not an irrelevant one, that whatever injury has been done, has been done to those speculations only which did not deserve to succeed. Those that did were helped by the extra number of strangers attracted by the Exhibitions to London, and so, according to the Darwinian theory, the most fitting most properly survived. This, at least, was the amiable explanation offered by Sir Cunliffe Owen, when he instructed the audience at Drury Lane theatre as to the rival positions held by himself and Mr. Augustus Harris. That house property about South Kensington has fallen in value since the inauguration of these Exhibitions might be a strong grievance with house proprietors had there not been a fall in such property all over London.

The complaint of the social purists that the Exhibition is a combination of a museum and old Cremorne, in which most of the peculiarities of Cremorne are retained, must be answered by the fact that it has been most popular with all classes. Even Bishops have gone there at the twilight hour, which, according to Dante, softens the heart, and renders poor human nature most susceptible to external influences. Of course there are people who, living in a moral atmosphere of their own, see all other people "through a glass darkly"; but London wanted a summer evening out-of-door resort, and has appreciated it thoroughly. Ravishing music and illuminated fountains playing in pleasant places may be "exhibits" of the Evil

One, but the spirits of Innocence and Beauty have a share in them also. Besides, carping critics should remember that the show was blessed from its opening hour by the Archbishop of Canterbury.

The proposal to merge the Exhibition into an Imperial Institute, in recognition of Her Majesty's Jubilee year, opens up larger questions which bring with them their own difficulties. If Imperial Federation is anything stronger than a patriotic dream, such an Institute might well and worthily be the outward and visible sign of the The idea is not one to be classed as some are doing it, as belonging only to the cloudland of Utopia. It might be carried out in a practical manner by practical men, with whom would be associated trusted representatives of the Colonies and India whose wealth and wellbeing are under the shelter of the Union Flag. There need not be much difficulty in securing the co-operation of all who are interested in India; the co-operation of the Colonies has, however, to be obtained. The wishes of the Prince of Wales will be carefully and loyally considered throughout Her Majesty's dominions, but there must be unanimity if there is to be success. It must be a National undertaking only.

COLONEL G. C. ROWCROFT, B.S.C., having proceeded on leave, Colonel H. R. B. Worsley, C.B., has assumed command of the Allahabad division.

Pending the arrival of Major L. R. Campbell, appointed to act for Colonel Evans, the permanent Assistant Adjutant-General, Allahabad Division, who is now on furlough, Lieut.-Colonel N. R. Stewart officiates in that capacity.

THE vacancy caused on the Viceroy's Staff by the return of Captain Balfour, A.D.C., Highland Light Infantry, to regimental duty will be absorbed, as there are still four Ades-de-Camp on the paid less. Two extra Aides-de-Camp will be appointed for the cold season as usual.

THE Soldiers' Industrial Exhibition at Poona was opened by General Sir Charles Arbutbnot, the Commander-in-Chief in Bombay, the Governor and Lady Reay being present. In matter of quantity the Exhibition is said to be hardly a success.

It has been decided to abolish Interpreters to British Regiments of Cavalry and Battalions of Infantry in India from the 1st of April, 1887, allowing corps on arrival in the country and for the first year of their service in India an Interpreter, as a temporary appointment, on the allowances now admissible.

MUNICIPALITIES are not to be entrusted for the future with guns. It has been laid down that time-guns are only allowed at stations where there is a field or garrison battery of artillery, or at any rate a force equal to two regiments, including at least a wing of a British regiment.

COLONEL G. R. HENNESEY, C.B., 15th Sikhs, assumed temporary command of the Peshawur District, vice Major-General Danbridge, vacated on promotion.

The Brigade Command of the Ceded Districts, Bellary, will fall vacant on the 15th inst., the date on which Colonel W. G. M. Strickland, Commandant, 13th Madras Infantry, the Acting Brigadier-General, becomes entitled to Colonel's allowances. The name of Brigadier-General Farrington was spoken of as the probable successor of Colonel Strickland in the command of the bable successor of Colonel Strickland in the command of the Ceded Districts, but, as Colonel Farrington's services are required by the Government of India, the next senior officer at Bellary will assume temporary command of the Ceded Districts.

THE HON. COLONEL SHAW-STEWART, Chief Engineer and Secretary to Government, Public Works Department, Madras, having retired under the fifty five years' rule, the Governor-in-Council, in accepting his resi. nation, places on record his very high appreciation of the service which that able and zealous officer has rendered to the Sate during the long period of his connection with the Public Works Department. Colonel Shaw Stewart is succeeded by Colonel J. O. Hasted, and Lieutenant-Colonel Pennywick succeeds Colonel Hasted as joint secretary to the Government Irrigation Branch.

NEW INDIA.*

We regret to find, in this new edition of Mr. Cotton's book, an attempt to diffuse, in a cheap form, errors concerning our rule in India, which have been repeatedly exposed, and were noticed

The brochure is simply a somewhat laboured argument to the effect that the continuance of our Raj in Iudia would be an all but unmixed evil, and that, leaving "India to the Indians," we should "skedaddle" at the earliest fitting opportunity, meanwhile doing our best to continuance of the second should "skedaddle" at the earliest fitting opportunity, meanwhile doing our best to accelerate the occurrence of such opportunity; and the reasoning employed to prove this somewhat startling proposition is neither profound nor altoge her pertinent.

Fancy India abandoned to the sway, not of Native statesmen, but to that of the graduates of our Indian universities, that is, of the loquacious and irrepressible Babu!

It may appear to Mr. Cotton, and to those who think as he does additionable thing at temporary are sinked and lead to the state of the second s does, a desirable thing to transform a possibly excellent specimen of a Native into a fiftieth-rate travesty of an educated Englishman. For ourselves, we have not concealed our opinion that an Indian never can become, and never ought to become, anything but an Indian pur sang. Initiated into Western civilisation, and West in science in its various branches, as far as his abilities and his personal inclinations and opportunities may permit, he will be a far more valuable "citizen of the universe," and one far more likely to be useful to his country, than by endeavouring to ape a foreign race. It were difficult adequately to imagine what oceans of blood would flow ere the real manhood which has never been lacking in India should have asserted its legitimate sway over womanish pedantry, or ere (as would, in the event of our "scuttling," be the more probable result) the entire Peninsula should fall under the brutalising domination of the Tsar.

should fall under the brutalising domination of the Tsar.

Is it worth while to incur these fearful risks in order to gratify the "fads" of a few enthusiasts?

We have ruled the country for about a century, during which we have accomplished more for its welfare than Native rulers ever attempted, or, if now reinstated, would attempt; where we are doing good, it is our duty, in the interest of the people themselves, to remain; not to say, that the benefits which we have conferred on the country entitle us to a somewhat less scurvy treatment than a "notice to quit" from even so very important (and infinitesimal) a fraction of the population as the Babus and Mr. Cotton.

THE ASIATIC QUARTERLY REVIEW.+

THE ASIATIC QUARTERLY REVIEW.†

In this number Dr. Hunter leads off with a masterly article, written in his usual telling style, on the Hindu child-widow. Much as we have heard of late of the child-widow, the subject is one of which it is not easy to tire. "There's a deal of human natur' in man"; and it is impossible to remember, without the deepest sympathy, the fact, that, at a low estimate, some two millions of girls, mostly mere children, are compulsorily relegated to a state scarce differing from servitude, for no better reason than because, "owing to their sins in a previous life," they have lost their husband in this. The higher castes, as is well known, cling to the deplorable custom which compels the child-widow to be a martyr or a mistress; and the castes which approach them in rank follow their example because it is "the thing." "A miserable girl-widow in a coarse mourning garment, with her little head shaven bald, and her penitential round of fasts and expiations, is in India the same sort of visible sign of gentility as keeping a man-servant in England." That the sacred books of the Hindus do not enjoin the detestable prohibition of remarriage, Dr. Hunter brings the evidence of a learned Brahman; and, for those who are acquainted with them, it is almost slaying the slain to do so. But that bane of our legal procedure, judge-made law—law made in India by men who had never, before arriving in the country, quitted, except during assizes, the beloved precincts of the Temple or Lincoln's Inn—has, to use Dr. Hunter's appropriate phrase, "crystallised" the evil; and even the Act legalising the remarriage of Hindu widows was flagrantly deficient in measures for their protection. "Once a priest, always a priest," used to be the saying; to which we may add, "Once legislation, always legislation." The need for fresh law-making to undo the errors of the previous Act is undoubted, and is one which cannot too soon be met. Before quitting the subject, we must express our In this number Dr. Hunter leads off with a masterly article, errors of the previous Act is undoubted, and is one which cannot too soon be met. Before quitting the subject, we must express our pleasure that the eminent services which Mr. Malabari has, by pen and personal advocacy, rendered to the cause of widow-remarriage are prominently, and deservedly, recognised in this interesting Essay.

It is not only as regards child-widows that our lawgivers in India have gone wrong. The whole system of legislation needs remodelling. A barrister of more or less (too often less) eminence is sent out as "legal member of Council" to a country of which he knows nothing, and for which he too often cares as little. He has subordinates imbued with departmental traditions; and the society in which he chiefly mixes is the legal society of Calcutta. society in which he chiefly mixes is the legal society of Calcutta. What chance has a man thus placed of becoming acquainted with the real needs of the country? "Our legislature has been too much permeated with the spirit of a practically Anglicised capital, and with the formal and technically legal atmosphere of an English law-office," is Mr. Baden Powell's complaint in an article ("English Legislation in Iadia") which well merits careful perusal. One remedy is simple. Appoint one of the many civilians who are Barristers to be "Legal Member." But then, the whole lawyers quarter of London would be up in arms! And what Ministry will venture to alienate the votes of all the Q.C.'s in esse and posse who adorn the benches of the Commons? Added to this fresh blood from England "in touch" with European law has its advantages.

The continued popularity of the "Colinderies" renders a few remarks on the manner in which such Exhibitions can best be utilised for the benefit of India extremely opportune, and the subject could not be in better hands than in those of Sir E. C. Buck, the energetic Revenue Secretary to the Government of India, and the energetic Revenue Secretary to the Government of India, and the originator of the Journal of Indian Art, to whose initiative so much of the success of the Indian Section of the great show is

Since the days of our childhood it has rarely happened to most of us to sit at the feet of a lady—for purposes, that is, of instruction—but we think few readers will lay down Miss Clerke's really erudice paper on "Arabic Analogies in Western Speech" without coming—as we did—to the conclusion that all Europe speaks Arabic. In Spain, Sicily, and the Levant this was to be expected, though Europe has given as well as taken; but few ladies would be prepared to be told that such words as lilac, chemise, babouches, mantle. sash, riband, muslin, dimity, cameo, are in their origin Oriental.

The question has often been raised, how far a good Musulman The question has often been raised, how far a good Musulman is bound to carry on religious war, covert or overt, against a government under which he lives in peace, and is protected? And it is satisfactory to find, on the unimpeachable authority of Dr. Leitner, that such an obligation is not only not to be found in the Koran, but is repudiated by it. Jihad means labour. The well-known sentence pronounced on Adam might, the Doctor assures us, be rendered, "In Jihad shalt thou eat bread, till thou return to the Jihadat" (sterile soil where Jihad is especially required to gain a crop). It would be satisfactory to be assured that all Musulmans in India were as well acquainted with their real obligations on this head as Dr. Leitner.

"India under the Mahomedans," from the practised pen of Mr.
James Hutton, is an interesting sketch, chiefly derived from the testimony of European travellers, of the condition of the Peninsula from the time of Akbar to those of Jahangir and Shahjahau. The paper is amusing as well as instructive, and may, for the latter reason, be recommended with some confidence to the Babus and their fautores. We learn, by the way (what we certainly did not know before), from Sir T. Roe's chaplain that curry was the dish which the Patriarch Isaac so affected that it led him to bestow his the Patriarch Isaac so affected that it led him to bestow his blessing on the wrong son!

We approach a matter of more serious practical import when we come to deal with the remaining more important articles, especially with that of Mr. Boulger on "England's Two Allies in Asia." "The practical value of an alliance," postulates the writer, "is shown by its being worth having, and by its not being purchased at an excessive price." Acting on this definition—one at which no one will cavil—he excludes Afghanistan as untrustworthy; and thinks that "Persia, long neglected, and in the last stage of decrepitude," as not "possessing the smallest influence on the course of events." Is not this somewhat broadly stated? That we have, with few exceptions, had most incompetent representatives at Teheran, men hopelessly incapable of coping with the astute diplomatists whom the Tsar has always placed there, is not to be denied. But that the decrepitude has gone so far that all hope in this quarter is to be abandoned—that we are, in fact (for this is the corollary of the editor's propothat we are, in fact (for this is the corollary of the editor's proposition), to sit with folded hands while diplomacy makes Persia a Russian satrapy, and possibly establishes an arsenal in the Gulf, we much doubt. We have not been well represented, and—most important to an Oriental mind—we have allowed our power to be forgotten.

Paullum sepultae distat inertiae Celata virtus:

the same may be said of ignored national power. Mr. Boulger's at preciation of the incalculable advantages to be derived in Asia Minor from a firm alliance with Turkey, and in the Far East from Minor from a firm alliance with Turkey, and in the Far East from a cordial understanding, and eventual co-operation, with China, seems to us as accurate as it is admirably expounded: while the danger, too often pooh-pooh'd, to which our most vital interests would be exposed by Russian occupation of Constantinople, is clearly set forth by "Asiaticus."

Mr. Edwin Arnold's tale of Suttee, "Başti's Wife," is, like everything else which he writes, very striking; while Mr. Edlin's paper, on "The Chinese Schools of Thought in the Age of Mencius," may well attract the attention of thoughtful Sinologists.

THE NATIONAL REVIEW.

While European politics are "at sixes and sevens" as they now are, considerations connected with them well deserve the place of konour which is assigned them in the present number of the National. In "England and the European Powers" "Philo Teuton" reviews our relations with the chief European with the States; adverting to their interests, and consequent probable action in the more immediate future. The writer makes everything centre round Prince Bismarck. That distinguished Statesman has never concealed his unalterable determination to spill no drop of German blood except for German interests; and, where no such interests are involved, his sentiments for disputant parties are of the most Platonic description, and his active interference need be looked for only in the last resort. Whether interference need be looked for only in the last resort. Whether by direct intervention, or by exercising his potent influence, he can only deal with the factors of the matter in hand. Is England not one of them? When an English writer laments "the perverse incapacity with which France has for many years conducted her foreign policy," and adds, "It has been a spasmodic policy, inspired by mortified and restless vanity," does he not lay his country open to a most damaging tu quoque? What words can better describe England's policy for threeen out of the last twenty years? Hence, and mainly hence, does it come that Bismarck is the arbiter of Europe. A strong English Government, acting (as does the Prince) on intelligent convictions as to the country's real interests, would give him a hitherto tions as to the country's real interests, would give him a hitherto unknown factor in the politics of Europe, with which he would have—always, we hope, in a friendly spirit—to reckon. For the present, however, we cannot do better than enter as "Philo-Teuton" suggests, into a close alliance with the Central European Powers; even though our long adherence to a rôle d'effacemen should prevent our speaking with the authority of a State whoset policy has always been consistent, and does not habitually "turn its back upon itself."

The inevitable Irish question appears again in Mr. Mott's very pertinent inquiry, what are "The Resources of Ireland?" He arrives at the conclusion that "the actual resources of the island are not sufficient for the number of its inhabitants," + which is "too great by at least a million for general comfort to be possible." That the cultivated area, the sole means of subsistence to the agricultural population, cannot be materially increased, Mr. Mott agricultural population, cannot be materially increased, Mr. Mott (p. 269) very clearly shows, while he considers the idea that effective present help can be given to the unhappy island "by what is called developing the resources and stimulating the industries of the country," a mere delusion. The resources are "fisheries, harbours, and land;" the industries (partly, it is to be remembered, owing to British restrictive legislation) of the smallest; in neither is there any present probability of expansion. "The first thing necessary," concludes the Essayist, "is that the number" (of the people) "should first be reduced to the limit" which the land can support. Emigration on a large scale would which the land can support. Emigration on a large scale would thus seem to be, in Mr. Mott's opinion, the one remedy.

The attention which has of late been directed, both in India and here, to the condition of Native women renders Mr. H. G.

Keene's article on the "Women of Indian History" as opportune as it is in itself interesting. While contrasting the comparatively free life of the Aryan women of old, with their present condition in India, the writer gives due prominence to those ladies whose names have been handed down by fame. From the poetess Rupmati to Nur Jahan Begum, and thence to Begum Samru, and to the Nawab Sikandar Begum of Bhopal, each receives the due meed of Bishop Littlejohn's account of the position of "The Laity in the Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States" is the second of a series of articles "by which it is hoped that light second or a series or articles "by which it is hoped that light may be thrown on the difficult question of the Representation of the laity in the English Church;" and well deserves attention, not only on this ground, but because of its intrinsic excellence. It may suffice here to say that the laity of the American Church have a representation in the General Convention, and in the Diocesan Councils, which the Bishop considers fairly satisfactory; but that the parochial arrangements, by which the clergy are "called, not sent," and are under the necessity of moulding their doctrines, ritual, and conduct, to the crotchets of lay trustees,

The "Great Unpaid" are the subject of a well-considered paper on "The Magistracy," by the Hon. E. V. Bligh, who, as a Chairman of Petty Sessions, writes with authority derived from experience. It is so obviously for the country's interest to secure the gratuitous judicial and administrative services of the natural leaders of society in each locality, that strong reasons would have to be given for the abolition of a system which is known to work well, and which a few simple changes would, as Mr. Bligh shows,

ject to which we have no space to do justice, and briefly to refer to which would be mere levity. A discriminative paper on the various schools represented in the late Exhibition of "Pictures at various schools represented in the late Exhibition of "Pictures at Edilburgh" is contributed by Mr. Walter Armstrong, and Mr. H. W. Hoare supplies a charming sketch of Old London Clubs. The little known Ecréhou Islands, with their solitary inhabitant, and the constant fishery disputes to which they give rise, are well described, and the claim of England to them, as dependencies of Jersey, vindicated as against France, by Messrs. Falle ank Humphreys. Fishing in Argyllshire is the subject of a chatty paper, "Western Waters," by the Hon. A. E. Gathorne-Hardy. That pretry may not be wanting, to a well-filled number, we have a rendering of the "Porvgilium Veneris," by Lord Lytton, which needs no praise from us, and with which our readers may like to compare Mr. H. G. Keene's version, in his lately published. "Verses, Translated and Original."

"The Army and Navy Magazine" for October (W. H. Allenand Co.) continues its translations from Baron von der Goltz and the late Mons, Gabriel Charmes' works, "The Nation in Arms' and 'Naval Reform." Major Harvey Kelly, of the Madras Staff Corps, contributes an exhaustive paper on the important subject of 'Land Transport in the East." A careful analysis of Sir Frederick Fitzwygram's "Return of Crime in the Army, 1884," although rather late in the day now, gives some curious and interesting information. "Letters from a Midshipmite," and "That Confounded Beard," serve as lighter metal against the heavier-weighted portions of the Magazine; and "Furlough" is, as usual, airy and original. An allusion to "The Popular and Witty Sir George Campbell" is brief but to the point. "The Army and Navy Magazine" for October (W. H. Allen

"VOICE OF INDIA.

A MAGAZINE THAT GIVES EXPRESSION TO THE PUBLIC OPINION OF THE PEOPLE OF INDIA.

THERE are in England large classes willing and anxious to do justice to India, but they find it very difficult to know how to act. They complain that Indian questions are intricate; that the opinions of official experts are contradicory; and that the people of India are dumb, and do not give expression to their needs. This defect is now remedied by publishing montrary (in Bombay) a manazine somewhat similar in nature to Public Opinion in England, which provides a compendium of all that is most valuable in the native journals throughout India on the leading topics of the day. The Poice of India thus gives forth a clear sound, interpreting between the rulers and the ruled, and making known the true wishes and feelings of the Indian people.

ing between the ruiers and the ruied, and making known the true wishes and feelings of the Indian people.

The Magazine advocates no views of its own. It seeks only to reflect with care and accuracy the views set forth in the native press. The Indian people are naturally dodle and consorvative; and it will be seen that the writings thus brought before the English public are characterised by a knowledge of facts, and generally by practical good sense and moderation. No doubt grievances are from time to time being set forth; but it is a policy of prudence, no less than of justice to give these grievances a fair constitutional hearing Accordingly, it is hoped that this publication will be subscribed for by Members of Parliament and other public men desirous of dealing with Indian questions, and that the facts thus brought together in a convenient form will be of va'ue to journalists and other public writers. It is specially desired to bring the Magazine before the public in Clubs, Reading-rooms, Libraries, and Institutes throughout England, with a view to promote a sustained and intelligent interest in the welfare of our Indian Empire, comprising as it does 220 millions of our fellow-subjects.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

MONDAY, OCTOBER 11, 1886.

General Intelligence.

[BY OVERLAND MAIL.]

THE Overland Mail brings us letters and advices from Bombay to the 24th September; from Allahabad and Madras to the 22nd September; and from Calcutta to the 21st September.

GREAT preparations were being made at Bombay when the mail left, in expectation of the arrival of the Duke and Duchess of Connaught by the s.s. Bengal, and a public holiday was to be held throughout the Presidency in honour of the Royal visitors.

SIR M. E. GRANT DUFF and Lady Grant Duff embarked on Tuesday on the P. and O. steamer Pekin. Lady Grant Duff will proceed in the Pekin to London; but Sir M. E. Grant Duff will disembark at Colombo, and, after paying a short visit to H.E. Sir Arthur Gordon, G.C.M.G., he will cross to Tuticorin, and return to Madras by way of Madura, Trichinopoly, and Tanjore.

THE news from Upper Burma this week is unimportant. Several isolated cases of dacoity have been reported, but generally the country appears to be settling down.

LATEST advices from Upper Burma report that there is a slight abatement in cholera at Mandalay, but it is raging from Mingyan to Ningyan.

THE news of the death of the Myingaing Prince, the most influential Burmese pretender, has been confirmed. Persons now at Mandalay have seen the dead body.

AT Mandalay, on the 22nd inst., twelve people were killed and a number of others injured, owing to a rush being made by the recipients of relief at the gate of the relief house.

THE HON. J. B. PEILE leaves Bombay to join the Council at Simla immediately after he has met Sir Steuart Bayley at Bombay. Sir Steuart Bayley himself leaves for England by to-day's mail.

It is stated that Mr. Erskine, Commissioner in Sind, has refused to accept the membership of the Bombay Council as an acting appointment, and that the portfolio will be entrusted to Mr. Richey during the absence of the Hon. J. B. Peile.

THE SECRETARY OF STATE has refused to sanction the appointment of additional judges to the Bombay and Calcutta High Courts.

It is announced that the transfer of the Forest Department from the control of the Home Department to that of the Revenue and Agricultural Department has been settled, and that it takes place immediately. This is only a return to the arrangement which obtained before the late Revenue, Agricultural, and Commerce Department was abolished in 1879 by Lord Lytton's Government.

THE Government of India has refused to exempt employés on coffee, tes, and cinchona estates from Incometax.

THE Chief Justice of the North-West. Provinces, on being relieved by Mr. Justice Straight, visits Calcutta this week, and may go on with Sir Comer Petheram for a short trip to Darjeeling.

ONE of the proposals of the Finance Committee is that the passage and outfit allowances (£800) granted under the Civil Travelling Allowance Code to an Ordinary Member of the Council of the Governor-General, and to a Chief Justice of the High Courts of Madras, Bombay, or | the North-West Provinces appointed in England should be abolished.

THE HON. F. L. LATHAM, Advocate-General, Bombay, has been granted twelve months' leave of absence to Europe from September 10.

Ir is probable that no special appointment will be made to the Foreign Office whilst Mr. Durand goes on short leave, so much of its work coming under the Viceroy's snpervision. Possibly the vacancy might be offered to Sir West Ridgeway.

Dr. Leitner finally retired from the Government service on the 1st September on a pension of Rs. 5,000 per annum, specially sanctioned for him by the Secretary of State. The pension to which his service of fifteen years entitled Dr. Leitner would not have, according to rule, exceeded Rs. 3,000 per annum.

A coroner's jury at Calcutta have brought in a verdict of culpable homicide not amounting to murder against Mr. D. M. Traill, of Calcutta, in a case in which a Mahomedan servant died, it was rumoured, from the effects of a blow. The medical evidence adduced at the inquest clearly showed that the deceased died from natural causes.

Ir has been decided to consider again the question of a defensive position in Pishin and on the Khojak Range. Captain Broadbent, R.E., of the Military Department, will probably visit Quetta and the neighbourhood during the ensuing cold weather, and report fully upon the proposed fort and lines.

THE emissaries of Dhuleep Singh are busily at work in the Punjab. Another and much more seditious proclamation than either of the former has been posted up in Mooltan, this time at the police barrack, known as the "Koop," in the very centre of the town.

THE Government of India have sanctioned the creation of a Legislative Council for the North-West Provinces.

THE arrangements for working the Cawnpur-Achneyra Railway to the Bombay-Baroda Company, which already works the Rajputana-Malwa system, have been completed, the North-West Government having ordered the transfer of the line from October 1st.

On the 12th instant Dr. Blindow, of the German manof-war Moewe, at present in Bombay Harbour, died suddenly, it is believed from apoplexy. Some discussion was caused by the commander of the vessel declining to allow an inquest to be held on the body on the ground of want of jurisdiction.

THE Shewbo, Sagaing, and Yen districts are generally quiet. The lower part of Chindwin is becoming fairly settled. In Nyingyan an expedition has gone against a large gang, which has been harassing the southern part of the district.

In Pagan, Myook, with the villagers and Burmese police, beat off a considerable body of dacoits under Bo Sho, six dacoits being killed, including one chief. The villagers lost four killed.

YEMETHEN is still considerably disturbed.

THE death of the Myingaing Prince, which occurred at a small Shan state, Ywangan, has ended in the general dispersion of his followers. The event also had a marked effect in the pacification of the neighbouring district, Kyouksee, the only district where the Prince had any real influence, the latest accounts from it being that except one small band of dacoits towards the south district, it is generally quiet. No dacoit leader representing the late Prince now holds in strength any part of Kyoukse.

SIR J. GORST, who was to have accompanied Sir Roper Lethbridge to India, has, we believe, abandoned for the present his intention of visiting the East. Sir Roper leaves England for Bombay on the 22nd inst., we understand, and will make a tour in the three presidencies.

GENERAL satisfaction has been felt amongst all Anglo-Indians that their old friend the P. and O. Company has secured the mail tender for ten years, commencing February, 1888, but they hope that by that time some scientific or other influence may be brought to bear upon steam, and the directors, so as to add a few more knots an hour to even the present rate of speed.

The news that a Commission has been appointed in India to reconsider the question of admission of the Natives to the Civil Service to a larger extent than at present will meet with every approval in this country. But it will be well if certain reformers, who are never tired of speaking or writing upon this subject in the interest especially of "young Bengal," take into their consideration the remark of the Times to-day in commenting upon this news.

Any scheme for the admission of Natives to important and responsible administrative positions which depends upon examinations of the ordinary type, testing little or nothing beyond mere receptivity, will certainly end in disaster. The stronger races of India require strong men to rule them, and cannot be long governed.

through mere proficients in book learning. Englishmen generally have the requisite qualities, though examinations do not prove the fact, but the Bengali generally does not possess them, though examinations do not bring out his deficiency. Our responsibility to the Indian peoples is one which in the last resort we cannot delegate by any cunningly contrived machinery. We are in India because we can rule and in virtue of the fact that we do rule. Whatever share we give to Natives in the work of government, English character must make itsfelf everywhere beneficently felt, otherwise the raison d'être of our presence disappears.

Herein lies this gist of the whole matter.

Nervors people at home need not alarm themselves too much about the sensational telegrams which have been coming from India during the past week regarding the rioting and bloodshed between the Mahomedans and Hindus on the occasions of their religious processions meeting at Delhi and elsewhere. Such clashing is always to be apprehended, and the local authorities generally make provision accordingly. The police appear, from the telegram published in the Times to-day, to have been terror-stricken, or perhaps sympathised at heart with the disturbers of the peace, hoping that the side to which their own religious belief lent would get the better in the row; the presence of the military, however, soon restored order, but not until certain fanatics got bayonet wounds. The Mahomedans were, as usual, first to commence the fray. At Delhi, having broken into a Hindu temple and smeared the place with blood, the Hindus revenged themselves by throwing a dead pig into the Jumma-Musjid, which, of course, helped to make matters lively between the contending factions.

Philosophers of the political school to which the great Catherine of Russia belonged might argue that in this division of feeling between the two Native bodies there is one guarantee of the security of our rule in India; we could "divide and govern." But there is another way of regarding the matter. The mild Hindu of Bengal has been encouraged to clamour for the hastening of the day when he shall be left by England to manage his own affairs, and the cry of "India for the Indians" has been raised in England by English agitators who know as much about India as they do about the South Pole. Surely both of these agitating bodies might take a profitable hint from the story of these disturbances. Where would be the Hindu if England left him to arrange for himself with his Mahommedan neighbour? He would not throw a dead pig twice into a Moslem mosque, we imagine.

What is the meaning of the re-arming of Kohat? In 1883 the five twelve-pounder breech-loading guns, which then constituted its chief defence, were removed, for what reason nobody outside of official circles then knew. It was said that heavier ordnance was to be substituted, but this was not done; so now in 1886, when another Russian scare is being prepared, the old guns are to be put back. The Lahore paper says that as a small specimen of our see-saw frontier policy this alternate dismounting and remounting of the same old guns in the same old place is "interesting," but it is to be hoped that the game will not go on as our contemporary fears it will, "until the coming of the Cocqcigrues"—whom some anthropologists aver to be of Russian descent.

The Civil and Military Gazette of Lahore, the place where Dr. Leitner has for years had his headquarters, and from which he fulminated his thunderbolts in Indian Public Opinion, is very severe regarding the pension which the Government has thought fit to award to the learned doctor. A Professor, like a prophet, would appear to have no honour in his own locality, judging from the following:—"We have announced that Dr. Leitner has on retirement been granted a pension of Rs. 5,000, whereas his period of indifferent service entitled him to Rs. 3,000 only. Mr. Moss, who is also retiring just now, after forty years' admirable service, has been granted the same pension as Dr. Leitner, because that is by strict rule what he is entitled to. Mr. Moss has been for years drawing Rs. 1,600 as pay at the head of an important branch of the service; what Dr. Leitner has been doing during the same period all the world knows well enough, because that gentleman's light has been of too explosive a character to be hidden easily under a bushel. On at least two occasions the chance of his dismissal from the service have been discussed, without tears, by the public. The rolling-stone, says the proverb, gathers no moss; but the proverb needs amendment. The moss which grows in its place, fulfilling its duty, gathers no rupees; but the stone which throws itself about to the injured of its neighbours is enriched. We would re-commend Dr. Leitner's pension to the notice of the Finance Committee.

THE Army and Navy Gazette says that the Bombay army should feel flattered by the compliment paid to it of having to do more than its fair share of work. It appears that the only reliefs of Bombay regiments this year are those in connection with Quetta. Three battalions of Native infantry go to Quetta, and three return to India. Thus the garrison of Quetta will still consist of one regiment of Bombay cavalry, three of infantry, besides sappers and miners. Seven Bombay regiments are in Burma. There is, of course, a regiment of Bombay infantry, as usual, in Aden, besides a company of sappers and miners. So that out of the seven cavalry regiments of the Bombay Army two are employed out of the presidency altogether, one in Quetta and one in Burma, and of the twenty-six regiments of Native infantry no fewer than ten are on field or foreign service; that is, six in Burma, three in Quetta, and one in Aden.

Our remarks regarding the apathy said to be shown by the Government of India towards the Volunteer movement in that country have been endorsed by our observant military contemporary, the Broad Arrow, which journal touches also upon another of the petty economies which the cry against Indian military expenditure seems to have inaugurated. "At a time like the present, when there is much anxiety throughout all India on account of rumours of approaching aggression from without, and of discontent and distrust within the borders of our Empire there, it is not satisfactory to read that, from motives of so-called economy, the Government are unable to give to the Volunteer Force the administrative supervision that it requires, and that the said force, numbering now some 15,000 effective men, is being allowed to drift as chance and circumstances direct. Another report of penny wise and pound foolish economy is to the effect that the Government of India contemplates doing away with the money rewards which have for years been granted to officers and soldiers who pass certain examinations in Persian and the Vernaculars. The paltry saving that this would effect would not be compensated by any advantage to the State. It would produce not only discontent but also discouragement of study, and this when the most intimate acquaintance with the Native languages and the Native character are essential to our keeping firm our hold in the East. The cry for reduction of military expenditure in India is no doubt a pressing one, but to starve the Volunteers into inanition, and cut down small allowances of the Regulars, is surely beginning economy at the wrong end."

TENDERS were invited at the Bank of England last Wednesday for India Council bills for 1,500,000 rupees, and 98,800 rupees were allotted, 10,000 rupees being on Bombay, 88,800 rupees on Calcutta. Tenders at 1s.  $5\frac{3}{16}$ d. per rupee and above will receive in full. A special allotment of bills on Calcutta to the amount of 100,000 rupees was subsequently made at 1s.  $\delta_{3}^{7}$  d. per rupee. The amount to be offered on Wednesday next will again be 1,500,000 rupees. An allotment of telegraph transfers to the amount of 500,000 rupees was also made on Bombay, tenders at 1s.  $5\frac{3}{3}$ d. per rupee and above receiving allotments in full. The amount realised by the sale of Bills and telegraphic transfers from April 1st to October 5th was £4,500,071.

CALCUTTA, OCT. 3.

The Duke and Duchess of Connaught arrived in Bombay last Monday morning, but, owing to an extraordinary series of blunders on the part of the authorities, the ceremony of welcome turned out a complete failure. The arrangements were originally made on the supposition that the steamer would anchor at daybreak. The local Government omitted the ordinary precaution of consulting the Duke by telegraph, and assumed that he would land at seven o'clock, their programme being founded on this assumption. It subsequently transpired that the steamer would not arrive quite so early as had been originally expected, whereupon the Bombay so early as had been originally expected, whereupon the Bombay authorities jumped to the conclusion that the Royal party would remain on board till the evening, and proceeded to alter their programme accordingly. The Duke and Duchess, however, landed almost immediately on their arrival, at about ten o'clock, and were received hy a hurriedly assembled deputation of officials and of the citizens of Bombay. An address of welcome was presented by healf of the corporation, and the party than drove to the on behalf of the corporation, and the party then drove to the Government House. On the following day they proceeded to Poonah, where they now remain as guests of the Governor. They will start thence on Wednesday, going vid Allahabad to Rawul Pindi. It is stated that they will visit the Viceroy at Simla in the course of this month.

The news that Sir C. Aitchison, on the expiration of his term of office as Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab, will succeed Sir The news that Sir C. Aitchison, on the expiration of his term of office as Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab, will succeed Sir S. Bayley in the Supreme Council has been received with some surprise. As a general rule the membership of Council is looked upon as a stepping-stone to a Lieutenant-Governorship, and the instances are few of an official reverting from the latter to the former position. The principle, however, of making a seat in Council the end to an Indian official's career would seem a good one, as tending to strengthen that body and make it more independent. As regards this particular case, there can be no doubt that Sir U. Aitchison will be more appropriately placed as a member of Council than as head of a province. Although a man of undoubted ability and the highest integrity, he has failed to make himself popular in the Punjab, and his administration of that province can hardly be called a success. The cause of his comparative failure is well described by an Indian newspaper, which says that he is constitutionally unfitted to grasp the political paradox which lies at the threshold of Indian administration, namely, that the thing which is theoretically right is in practice often dangerous and wrong. As a Member of Council there will be less risk of his being led astray by ideas in advance of the times, while his great experience and knowledge of affairs will be most useful to the country.

A news agency telegram from London states that Sir L. Griffin is to succeed Sir C. Aitchison in the Punjab. Nothing was known of this at Simla un to vesterday, and it seems strange that the is to succeed Sir C. Aitchison in the Punjab. Nothing was known of this at Simla up to yesterday, and it seems strange that the news, if true, was not communicated officially to the Viceroy before it was made public. So far as is known in India, all that can be said is that this appointment is very probable, although a week ago Sir C. Bernard was considered to have a better chance. The announcement that Sir A. Lyall's term of office in the North-West Provinces has been extended for six months has been expected for the contract time as it was received without supprise.

A meeting of the National Association for Supplying Medical Aid to the Women of India was held at Simla on Wednesday, Lady Dufferin presiding. Mr. Ilbert opened the proceedings by describing the work done. He said that the reports received from the various provinces were highly satisfactory. The main object now was to establish the association on a permanent footing, for which purpose further funds were required. This movement was, he said, a message of love and sympathy from the women of England to their sisters in India. Sir A. Colvin made a statement regarding the financial prospects of the association. The estimate for next year's work showed a surplus, but before the financial condition of the undertaking could be called thoroughly satisfactory, it required a lakh and a quarter more capital. He said that the province was not rich. The few wealthy men had given what they could, and the movement was spreading among other classes. Sir Lepel Griffin spoke of the interest shown by the Princes of Central India, and suggested that the Queen's jubilee next year might be appropriately commemorated in connection with this

A telegram received from Madras yesterday states that the floods in the Godavery district have occasioned a fatal affray. CALCUTTA, OCT. 10.
The last week has been marked by a recurrence of those outbursts of religious fanaticism which from time to time show that, notwithstanding all we hear about the growth of feelings of union notwithstanding all we hear about the growth of feelings of union among the Natives, the animosity between the Hindoos and Mahomedans is, perhaps, as deep and bitter as it was a century ago, and justifies the anxiety felt by district officers whenever festivals of the two sects occur simultaneously. This year it happened that the Ramlila festival, held in high honour by the up-country Hindoos, coincided in time with the Mahomedan's Mohurrum. The result was that serious riots broke out at Etawah, in the North-West Provinces, and Delhi.

At the former place each party intended to have a religious

At the former place each party intended to have a religious procession on the same day. Mr. Hoey, the district magistrate, made what appeared to have been proper arrangements, and issued orders fixing the time and limits for the respective processions. The Mahomedans seem to have been the aggressors. They assembled in large numbers near the city police-station, and when the magistrate came up to ascertain their intentions several fanatics armed with sticks made a rush at him and compelled fanatics armed with sticks made a rush at him and compelled him to take refuge in the police-station. Mr. Hoey sent for an influential Mahomedan, an honorary magistrate, and asked him to remonstrate with his co-religionists. His remonstrances proving vain, the policemen were ordered to load, and a small body of mounted police was brought up. Then came one of the worst features in the whole affair. Extraordinary cowardice was shown by the police. The mounted men refused to advance against the mob, and the main body disobeyed the order to fire. The rioters were for a time masters of the situation, and a sanguinary affray seemed imminent, as the Hindoos, furious at the guinary affray seemed imminent, as the Hindoos, furious at the detention of their procession, sent word to the magistrate that they were 2,000 strong, and were prepared to attack the Mahomedans.

The danger was averted by the presence of mind of the stationmaster, who informed the magistrate that a train was expected which was conveying a portion of the King's (Liverpool Regiment) to Calcutta en route for Burma. The magistrate authorised the to Calcutta en route for Burma. The magistrate authorised the detention of the troops, and when the train came in a detachment 100 strong, under Captain Vesey, of the 8th Hussars, marched to the scene of the riot. Captain Vesey directed his men not to load, but to try the effect of a bayonet charge. The rioters, although again warned, continued to attack the troops with sticks and stones from the tops of the houses, while several fanatics threw themselves on the bayonets. Eventually the streets were cleared order was restored and the troops proceeded. streets were cleared, order was restored, and the troops proceeded on their journey. One hundred and fifty of the rioters were arrested, some of whom have since been released, but the majority are swaiting trial. Captain Vesey and some of the soldiers had narrow escapes. The number of the casualties among the rioters has not been accurately ascertained, but the encounter was apparently a small affair. It would unquestionably have been most serious but for the fortunate accident of the passing of a trooptrain, as no European soldiers are stationed nearer than Agra, some hours distant.

The riot at Delhi commenced on Tuesday evening, the Mahomedans being again the aggressors. Several men armed with clubs started in a small procession, against orders, and, in spite of the remonstrances of the police, took the routo reserved for the Hindoo pro-cession. Mr. Smyth, Deputy-Commissioner, tried to induce them to cession. Mr. Smyth, Deputy-Commissioner, tried to induce them to move off, whereupon they attacked him. Mr. Hatchell, superintendent of police, received a sword cut on the head, and Mr. Davis, assistant superintendent, was injured by a stone. The Deputy-Commissioner was also roughly used. The police displayed the same cowardice as at Etawah, and their European officers were obliged to retreat. Luckily the Hindcos behaved well, and, in compliance with Mr. Smyth's request, turned their procession by another route, thus averting a collision. Two companies of European and the same number of Native troops were called out. The rioters showed less determination than those at Etawah for The rioters showed less determination than those at Etawah, for they dispersed on the arrival of the soldiers. The streets were patrolled all night, and the guards at the Treasury and the Bank of Bengal were strengthened. Over ninety arrests were made. According to the latest news there had been no recurrence of the riots, but the attitude of the Mahomedans was described as ominous. The influential members of that sect appear to be doing their best to preserve order. The facts that a Mahomedan lad was found murdered in the Queen's Gardens and that a dead pig was thrown into the Jumma Musjid show that the Hindoos are prepared to retaliate, but as both festivals are now over it may be hoped that no further breaches of the peace will occur.

TO THE EDITOR.

Sir,—The subject of the enclosed extract from the Madras Mail is of so much interest to many of your readers, that I think I need make no apology for asking you to give it place in your columns together with this letter:—

"Sir,—The fall in exchange raises an interesting question with the holders of the older policies of this Company, in which it is provided that the sum assured will be paid in India in rupees or in England at an equivalent of two shillings per rupee. A policy, therefore, for Rs. 10,000, would still be payable in England as £1,000, if the representative of the life assured wished payment to be made there. In more recent policies the Company have altered the clause, providing for settlement, making themselves liable only for a rupee payment, and of course those accepting such policies can have no claim, I presume, beyond the rupee amount stated in the policy. An unsatisfactory feature, however, I think, in the Company's recent actions is the change in dealing with their bonus additions. In connection with old policies these were formerly stated in sterling, and of course, in accordance with the provision for settlement of the principal sum assured, they would fall to be added to the par value thereof. Now the bonuses are stated in rupees, as well as the surrender values. Although the terms of the old policy are very clear I believe the Company do terms of the old policy are very clear I believe the Company do not recognize their liability to pay in sterling at par, and this change in the bonus additions from sterling to rupees is no doubt connected with the question. As there are no doubt a goodly number of old policy-holders in this Presidency, I shall be glad if this clicits their views on the subject

I have carefully preserved the punctuation of the above

Surely the Company are bound to pay the amount, also bonuses, on my decease, in accordance with the above, at par, in sterling money, in London, I having finally quitted India some years ago?

As regards Bonuses; up to, and inclusive of the bonus issued on 15th November, 1875, the Certificates are made out in sterling money, containing likewise entries of the original sum assured, in sterling at the abilities of the original sum assured, in sterling, at two shillings per Rupee.

In the bonus Certificate of 15th November, 1880, Rupces are throughout substituted for sterling, in both the original sum assured, also (and at the rate of one Rupee for every two Shillings), in the bonuses previously declared, and in the bonus declared on that date.

I can hardly believe that "Graphic" is correct in saying that "the Company do not recognise their liability to pay in sterling at par" on policies falling to be paid in London; and I hope that some one of your subscribers may be able to give information on the subject. I enclose my card.

GOLD.

TO THE EDITOR.

SIR,-With reference to Mr. H. G. Keene's letter published in your paper of the 1st inst., that gentleman appears to have over-looked the effect of war in reducing the price of gold. War not only induces the possessors of gold to lend it, but causes gold hoards to be transferred from peaceable men into the hands of plunderers.

If Russia should succeed in plundering India, she might throw into circulation the £150,000,000 of gold which Mr. Keens believes to be there either in hoards or jewellery.

In B.C. 357 when the Temple of Delphi was pillaged, more than 10,000 talents of gold (say £35,000,000) were throw into circulation.

When Julius Casar returned from France, and crossed the Rubicon, he brought so much plundered gold into Italy that the ratio of gold to silver, which had been as high as 1 to 17, fell to

The plundering by Tamerlane in A.D. 1398, and by Nadir Shah in A.D. 1739, doubtless caused much gold to see the light. In the Mutiny of 1857 Brazier's Ferozepore Regiment obtained so much gold that each private soldier was adorned with a pair of large golden earrings, which, with their red coats, gained for them the name of golden birds.—Your obedient servant, T. October 4th.

THE INDIAN COTTON IMPORT DUTIES QUESTION. (Madras Mail.)

Lord Harris, as Under Secretary of State for War, is, to a great extent, free to express in public his individual opinion of what financial policy it may conceivably be expedient to adopt for the benefit of the Indian revenue, but as he was very lately Under Secretary of State for India, peculiar importance was evidently attached to his suggestion at Manchester that the import duties on cotton goods may have to be reimposed. He has distinguished himself by his coolness and courage in the cricket field, and it must be admitted that he displayed those characteristics when propounding what would be locally thought a horrible heresy to a Manchester audience. Sir John Gorst, as his successor in the India Office, promptly stated in the House of Commons that neither the Home nor the Indian Government meditates the reimposition of duties on Manchester goods. He could not go farther and say that Lord Dufferin would scorn to accept the million or so of additional revenue that would accrue from the adoption of Lord Harris's suggestion. It is exceedingly probable that the unsoundness which Lancashire men will have seen in Lord Harris is not confined to that member of the present Government. The duties were notoriously sacrificed, partly by Mr. Gladstone, and partly by Lord Salisbury, in view to conciliating the Lancashire Cerberus; and, having once been repealed, the theory is that their reimposition is impossible. But stranger things have happened in the eventful history of the world. Lancashire is concerned firstly for her own trade; but on cotton goods may have to be reimposed. He has distinguished stranger things have happened in the eventful history of the world. Lancashire is concerned firstly for her own trade; but she is also greatly concerned in the solvency of India; and she may yet be taught to see, that as there is no other way of taxing India in a safe way, it may be worth while to reconsider the question of the duties. The present Premier, like his immediate predecessor, is committed to some very plausible theories in defence of what was an act of great injustice to India. It would not be agreeable to him to have his words brought up in judgment against him, should he show an intention of coming round to the against him, should he show an intention of coming round to the common-sense view of Lord Harrick and crowds of other men. But India's necessity is so extreme that it furnishes Lord Salisbury with an opportunity of repairing the mischief done to India for electioneering purposes. Lord Salisbury is well-known to be anything but a true believer in free trade. He has not, in so many words, allied himself to "fair trade"; but what he has said has been sufficient to show which way his inclinations tend. Lancashire opinion cannot be flouted with impunity by any Premier; but even Lancashire may yet come round to the idea that free-trade principles were applied in a short-sighted manner to dumb India.

THE MARRIAGE OF SUBALTERNS.

(Times of India.)

General Bou'anger is going to introduce a regulation into the French Army, forbidding subalterns to marry, or, at any rate, he is going to make matrimony as difficult for them as possible. Now here in India we are undoubtedly suffering from the same alarming tendency of the subaltern to marry. Nothing seems able to deter him. He cares nothing that the rupee is worth little more than a shilling. He will get some good appointment, and give the object of his affections every luxury to which she has been accustomed at home. If the subaltern falls in love while he is still in a British regiment, he offers to give every proof of the sincerity of his affection. He will leave the gallant Billingsgate Rangers with all their famous historical associations, and will join the Staff Corps. Yes, he is actually prepared to join a black regiment, and serve with sepoys, if, by this heroic act, the parents of his beloved will but consent to their union. And, being generally taken at his word, he bids a tender adieu to his British General Boulanger is going to introduce a regulation into the generally taken at his word, he bids a tender adieu to his British comrades, and, with a strong feeling that is sacrificing everything for love, he joins a Native regiment, engages a Munshi, and painfully explores the beauties of the Bagh-o-Bahar. He finds his life rather a dull one, but bears up gallantly for the sake of

At mess his only companions are the Major of the his love. regiment, who has about as much romance in him as a barn door; and the Scotch doctor who is cuts with the Major, and will not speak to him even at mess. One evening at mess, our subaltern bursting with his secret, and finding himself dining tête-à-tête with the Major, confides his hopes and tears to that gallant officer, with the Major, confides his hopes and tears to that gainst officer, whose only resporse to this confidence consists in sundry uncomplimentary allusions to the married state in general, and to the particular folly of subalterns who marry. If he is really bent on committing such a piece of folly, the Major strongly advises him to enter the Commissariat Department as soon as possible, since a married subaltern in a regiment is a fish out of water. But nothing daunted, our subaltern sticks to his Munshi, and passes in Hindustani, finally entering the S aff Corps and the married state at the same time. It is surprising how very often entrance to the Staff Corps is only the prelude to marriage. Two and even three married subalterns in a regiment is quite a common allowance, and the mess suffers accordingly. A regiment of married officers cannot afford to be hospitable, and the credit of the corps suffers proportionately. We do not see that any steps can be taken to check the British subaltern in his headlong career of matrimony, but it will be worth while watching the action of General Boulanger in the matter to see if anything can be done in India. The light-heated British subaltern, who marries at two-and-twenty, is a middle-aged man with the cares of a family on him at two-and-thirty, and his zeal for the Service is necessarily damped by the necessity of trying to make both ends meet, and to live with some sort of regard for keeping up appearances.

SIR GRANT DUFF. (Madras Times.)

How comes it that the Madras Government has so grievously blundered, and so perversely—we may say stupidly—doue wrong in this Sullivan case from beginning to end? In a great measure it is due to the seclusion and inaccessibility of the Governor, whereby he sees only the few who are specially admitted to him, and receives only information formally and officially laid before him. If he met the gentlemen in the Presidency, as other Governors before him used to meet them, he could not help hearing and seeing and knowing something of what everybody see and hears and knows and talks about. Indeed, in a personal interview even a practised deceiver not seldom betrays by a tone, a look, a phrase, or an inadvertent speech, what it is to the interest of his game to conceal. And this is especially the case when he is off his guard, when under the notion that he is in favour or successful. But Mr. Grant Duff cuts himself off from the ordinary avenues of information; and has to take only what is put before him as it is allowed to reach him. And he is naturally most in such sympathy as he is capable of, with those nearest to him, and is most affected by what from or through them tirst and oftenest reaches him. He thinks he will be just by abstracting himself from personal contact with mon. With some he must be in contact; and he has proved that he is exceedingly susceptible to the influence of such exceptional contact. Contact with a larger number of persons would prevent his being misled by a few, or feeling contact so much.

SIR GRANT DUFF'S SUCCESSOR. (Madras Mail.)

It is not a violent supposition that the Duke of Buckingham is in no small measure responsible for the choice that Lord Salisbury has made of a successor to Sir M. E. Grant Duff. The World remarks that "the most hostile critic of Her Majesty's Government can find nothing to say against the appointment of Mr. Robert Bourke as Governor of Madras. Intellectually keen, and socially popular, with official experience, and the best of recommendations as the brother of the late Lord Mayo, Mr. Bourke will be received with open arms by the Presidency which he is to govern." This is borne out by the copious extracts from he is to govern." This is borne out by the copious extracts from London papers of all ways of political thinking which we have published. Lord Salisbury and the Duke of Buckingham are old allies. Educated alike at Eton and Christ Church, they were members of Lord Derby's third, and Lord Beaconsfield's first Cabinets; they occupy the same crimson bench in the House of Lords; and, last year, the former conferred on the latter the coveted position of Chairman of Committees in that distinguished assembly. It would necessirily be agreeable to one who thoroughly identified himself with Madras from 1875 to 1850, to be instrumental in conferring on Madras the advantage of a ruler endowed with the characteristics that are attributed to Mr. Bourke. Mindful of his age, that gentleman is known to have taken time to consider whether or no he would accept the appointment; and it is probable that he was moved to decide in the efficient way by the companying the limit of the following his transfer with the companying the limit of the following his transfer with the companying the limit of the following his transfer with the companying the limit of the following his transfer with the context of the limit of the following his transfer with the context of the limit of the following his transfer with the context of the limit of the the affirmative by the communication to him by the Duke of his pleasant recollections of this Presidency and its people. No one in any quarter has said that Mr. Bourke is a man of extraordinary genius; but it is universally admitted that he is blessed with ood common sense, that he is an excellent man of business, and that his manners are peculiarly engaging. In these respects he would seem to resemble Mr. Adam, as well as Lord Mayo. If, then, the Duke of Buckingham has assisted in securing Mr. Bourke for Madras, he has rendered no small additional service to the thirty millions of his fellow-being, whose ruler he himself

EDUCATION IN BENGAL.

(Englishman.)

Higher education in Bengal does not seem a success if we are to judge by visible results; and if we had to describe it in a phrase we should say it was essentially breadth without depth. But we would rather describe most of it as no education at all, for the Bengali's mind has neither been led to think nor has it been endowed with useful knowledge. Throughout the whole province numbers are to be found just able to speak English, and some fit to be clerks, but the educated man is the greatest rarity. Public and private offices are crowded with these uneducated men; and in each district there are three or four schools turning them out as fast as they can. When the circumstances of this education are considered, it is no wonder that the ordinary Bengali Babu has become something grotesque and nondescript. By being taught the English grammar and by the use of a few text-books he is introduced to the richest language and the most complicated civilisation in the world. Tied down by a low material civilisation, he lives amid surroundings little better than those of a common cultivator. What he has learned does nothing to raise him in the scale of civilisation. He has none of that knowledge that is power; and, civilisation. He has none of that knowledge that is power; and, except that he can write and converse in a foreign tongue, he is as helpless as he was before. In one sense, he is more helpless; for before his ideas and surroundings were in congruity, and he was part of a settled order. He is now merely a member of class which has no organatic life, and does not seem able to develop any. He has ceased to believe Hinduism, and consequently has no religion. In fact, he has become a mere parasite of English civilination with no separate life, and with no power of individual growth. of individual growth.

Let no one say that we are opposed to English education for Natives. What we are opposed to is a system of no education—a system of unsettling the minds of the young, of casting them on the world without any guide, moral or intellectual. And all this is done strictly under State patronage. If the Bengali upper classes have really made it their ideal to acquire something of English, and consider that to be education, they must be left to the stern logic of facts to undeceive them, but let not the State be a partner in their folly. The present policy of giving the bulk of the middle class a slipshod English education owed its rise to the desire to procure clerks and other public servants. The rise to the desire to procure clerks and other public servants. The bad economic and moral effects that have followed were not then anticipated. But the State's primary object has been only par-tially fulfilled. Each public office is now manned by a crowd of tially fulfilled. Each public office is now manned by a crowd of these English-speaking, uneducated men. They are well paid, considering their qualifications and the market supply, but for their responsibility their pay is insufficient. Corruption and fraud are consequently rife among them, and most of the great public departments are not managed as they should be. We have not yet seen the report of the Salaries' Commission, and we do not know what recommendations they have made to improve the status of the clerks and the work of the public offices, but we fear there cannot be much improvement till the men employed are of better education, and we do not know how these are to be obtained till there is some change in middle class schools Government should immediately cease to encourage schools which are merely forcing houses for the production of such men as we have described.

OPIUM IN BURMA.

(Rangoon Gazette).

All the outcry which is occasionally raised, about the wickedness of selling opium to the Burmese, seems to us to proceed from the same mistaken notion as to what can be done by Government in the way of forcing people to be good, by keeping all temptation out of their way. In our opinion it is mere folly to get on moral stilts and say that Government should not derive revenue from so unholy a source as opium or fiery liquors. Opium eating and smoking, like drunkenness, can only be put down by raising the people generally to the mental and moral level at which such pleasures cease to attract. A couple of generations ago in Great pleasures cease to attract. A couple of generations ago in Great Britain the present attitude of mind of the upper and middle classes in regard to drunkenness was attained to by only a few exceptional individuals. Our grandfathers looked on getting "as drunk as a lord" as a necessary part of conviviality, and they would have been quite unable to understand our looking on drunkenness as a sign of defective social breading. In India we drunkenness as a sign of defective social breeding. In India we may trust to the same sort of revolution taking place in regard to the demoralising drugs now used as the people advance in intelligence and true civilisation. Meantime it is useless to try and forcibly prevent any indulgence in such drugs. Depraved people, bent on getting opium or liquor, will find some way of eluding any restrictions the law may impose.

An instance of the utter futility of expecting to check the consumption of opium by electing the color than it gives in the consumption of opium by closing the opium shop is given in the Report on the Excise Department of Lower Burma for the year 1885-86. Mr. Coplestone tells us that when he was in Akyab he saw two men engaged in selling morphia pills. One of these men was a Mahomedan with a little medical knowledge, and on being questioned, he said that, while the opium shop at Akyab was closed, he had sometimes as many as 500 customers a day for his pills. This man must have had the germs of a successful quack doctor in him, for his pills were alleged to wean the persons who took them from any desire for opium. If the people of India read newspapers, and if this man had advertised extensively, he might have made a fortune as the late Mr. Holloway did. As it was, he no doubt reaped a golden harvest from the closing of the opium shop.

BENGAL.

HIS EXCELLENCY THE VICERCY has been pleased to ask the British Indian Association to re-elect the Hon. Peary Mohun Mookerjee as their representative in the Supreme Legislative Council of India.

THE total exports of tea from Calcutta during the season amount to no less than 19,246,486 lbs., as against 19,102,752 lbs. at the same date in 1885, and 16,890,530 lbs. in 1884. In August, the exports to Great Britain were 8,714,531 lbs., while the trade with America showed a large increase. The Ceylon trade is also making rapid progress, the exports up to the 26th ult. being nearly double those of last year.

Mr. Thomas Stevens, the adventurous American bicyclist who has travelled across Europe and Persia, and was turned back from Afghanistan, was lately in Calcutta when he proposed to resume his journey round the world. Mr. Stevens was entertained at dinner by the members of the Dalhousie Bycling and Athletic Clubs. Mr. Stevens, in responding to the toast of his health, announced that from Calcutta he intended going to Canton. His original idea was to go to Burma, but he was afraid that an attempt in that direction, the country being at present disturbed, would meet with serious difficulties. From Canton he contemplated going to Shanghai, and thence to Japan and Yokohama.

WITH a change in the Lieutenant-Governorship impending, it is hardly to be expected, the Englishman remarks, that the Bengal Government will make any very sweeping recommendation with regard to the Hills question. It is probable, however, that in future two Secretaries and two Under-Secretaries on the Civil side, and the whole of the Public Works Secretariat, will remain in Calcutta, and that two Secretaries and one Under-Secretary will accompany the Lieutenant-Governor to Darjeeling. Heads of Departments may be allowed to go to Darjeeling till the rains, and again in September. The expenditure on the latter score would be trifling, as the heads of departments would take very small establishments. The arrangement, of course, is as yet quite undecided, but it may be hoped that, independent of any recommendations that may be made by the present Government, the future Lieutenant-Governor will take a prompt initiative in mitigating the evils of the present system, so far as Bengal is concerned.

MADRAS

'The ladies of Madras presented Lady Grant Duff, prior to her departure to England, with a souvenir in the shape of an address which has been designed by the School of Arts. The address is to be followed by a beautiful carved ebony cabinet costing about Rs. 1,500, which is being executed at the same institution

Sir M. E. Grant Duff and Lady Grant Duff embarked on Tuesday on the P. and O. steamer Pekin. Lady Grant Duff will proceed in the Pekin to London; but Sir M. E. Grant Duff will disembark at Colombo, and, after paying a short visit to H.E. Sir Arthur Gordon, G.C.M.G., he will cross to Tuticorin, and return to Madras by way of Madura, Trichinopoly, and Tanjore. His Excellency proposes to remain in Madrid until the first week in December, when his successor, the Right Hon. R. Bourke, accompanied by Lady Susan Bourke, C.I., are expected to arrive. The Madras Mail in the course of a farowell notice of Lady Grant Duff remarks that she "will be remembered with the grateful respect as one who, in the God-fearing spirit of Henry Lawrence, tried to do her duty for its own sake, and succeeded in placing the whole community under great obligations. She has unconsciously realised the ideal of what the wife of a Governor, or Viceroy, in this land should be; and she has done so, not so much because she is blessed with more than average intelligence, but because she has acted up to her own precept, that a true lady should be 'a woman specially circumspect in her conduct, especially forbearing towards others, specially gentle and controlled in temper, specially kind in manner.' It is because she has consistently reflected the chief characteristics of her Royal Mistress that Lady Grant Duff has achieved a success which will be long and gratefully remembered in Madras."

BOMBAY.

An extraordinary and almost incredible story reaches the Deccan Times from Hanamcondah. A man was the other day ordered to be released who had been sixteen years in jail and in fetters pending trial. As nothing could be proved against him, it has at last occurred to the District authorities that he might be set at liberty.

It is said to be probable that the instalment of two lakes of rupees due to Sultan Nawaz Jung under the terms of the settlement made by the Nawab Salar Jung in May last year, will shortly be paid to him. Rumour has it that his Highness is tired of waiting until the Council of State has concluded its consideration of the settlement, and means to sanction the payment without further delay.

THERE will be great festivities in Hyderabad on the occasion of the forthcoming visit of the Viceroy. The decorations and illuminations will be on a scale of unprecedented magnificence. But why should it be considered necessary to go all the way to Vienna for a number of triumphal arches for the Viceroy to pass under? When Hyderabad can produce a screen of sufficient artistic merit to be one of the most attractive features of the Indian and Colonial Exhibition, it is surely not necessary to go so far a-field for a few triumphal arches which are intended to answer a temporary purpose only.

The first official report on the prospects of the cotton crop in the Bombay Presidency is as follows:—"The forecast refers to the early districts of the Deccan only. Khandesh: Area roughly estimated at 1,000,000 acres, that is, 300,000 acres more than last year, and 225,000 more than last seven years' average. Sowings early and unusually good season expected. Ahmednagar: Area about 50,000 acres, and Sholapur about 25,000 acres. In both districts area considerably above last year, and in Ahmednagar above average. Incomplete figures for Nasick, Poona, and Satara where, as in Khandesh, season is favourable, crop healthy, and prospects good."

prospects good."

THERE is strong reason for believing that the man Johnston, who recently arrived at Hyderabad, and who gave out that he was an Irishman, but was captured in childhood by the Afghans, is identical with a suspicious character who has for the last few years been conspicuous in the North of India. His real name appears to be Kurban Ali. He served as a Khalasi in the Kandahar Field Force in 1880. On discharge he took service for some time under an officer of the Royal Engineers, and was next heard of as trying to enlist as a soldier in the Suffolk Regiment at Delhi, giving out that during his infancy he was kidnapped by Khyberees, and sold to one Akbar Khan of Ghazni, and that he was found by General Roberts, who brought him to Quotta. The story of his having been kidnapped is not believed.

NORTH-WEST PROVINCES AND PUNJAB.

THE Bonerwals, finding no serious notice taken of their last raid, have gone off to prepare to reap their crops, so the frontier is quiet for the time being.

The Civil and Military Gazette says:—We are sorry to be receiving just now, from different parts of this province (the Punjab), a large number of complaints by Hindoos against Mahomedans. Here, for instance, is one from Umballa: —"Umballa city, Bawandawadshi fair (annual Thakoor Pooja) stopped; Manommedans allowed to start a new fair in spite; market closed since nine days; great inconvenience prevails; several telegrams sent to Government of India and Punjab." Such of the complaints as we have investiga ted have proved, as a rule, either groundless or largely exaggerated, but their very numbers show that, for the moment, the teelings of Mahomedans and Hindoos against each other are most foolishly sensitive.

A curious story of melodramatic revenge reaches the Pioneer from a village not far from Mirzapur. One Sakhawat, the agent of a local Mahomedan landholder, while on his rounds one day last month, was suddenly surrounded by a dozen or so of Brahmins, who firmly, and by no means politely, conducted him, pony and all, to their own village. There they pulled him off his pony and, after some preliminary beating and beardpulling, a Pasi was brought up with a bleeding piece of pig's ear, and the savoury morsel was forced into the karinda's mouth. Next, a Musahar, about the lowest description of rat-eating humanity available, was made to spit in his face. After that some of the ringleaders' womenfolk blackened his face with soot; and finally he was ridden out of the village on the dhobi's donkey and let loose in a very damaged condition near Jauppore border. The assailants are, of course, in jail, for the times are not in accord with dramatic revenge. But the karinda will probably confine himself strictly to business in future, and let the female portion of the tenantry alone.

It is highly probable, the Pioneer says, that all the lieutenant-colonels of the old Indian Engineers, of five years' service and upwards, will shortly be placed on a supernumerary list, remaining, however, in active employ, and promotions being made in their room. This will give a much desired fillip to promotion among the majors of the corps, which now lags far behind that of the rest of the army, the senior major of the old Bengal cadr having nearly thirty years' service.

BOOKS. NOTICES OF

"THE MAKING OF THE IRISH NATION."-" NORAH MORIARTY."

"Whigs and Tories fog everything and fetter everything because they do not know and cannot conceive that a true, real, complete nation is, and must be, a better and truer ally than an incomplete and faulty one. There is no future for their politics because there is no truth, largeness, or depth in their conceptions either of manhood, the only political force, or of nationhood, the only political royalty." Such is the spirit in which Mr. Partridge approaches the most difficult, the most heartrending, the most embarrassing problem which has ever presented itself for solution in the history of this nation. Nor will it occasion surprise in these circumstances to read that Pitt was a "false statespriss in these circumstances to read that Pitt was a "false statesman," whose efforts to found "immorality upon weakness"... shook "Hell with laughter," and, per contra, that Gladstone is the man of destiny and of the epoch" who alone is able to "translate into politics the hieroglyphics of God"—who alone—it is inferred, not stated—is capable of leading the attack on the House of Lords with its "shricking marquises" and on the Commons, which two chambers combined form "counterfeit presentments of senates conservative of wrong." And what has Mr. Partridge to tell us? Starting from "the mists of antiquity," he endesyous to prove that the frish were originally a cultivated he endeavours to prove that the Irish were originally a cultivated nation, and that in the early ages of mankind, amidst the general overthrow of Europe, Erin was the cradle of learning and the nursery of thought. Possessing, too, a Parliament of her own, she was prosperous, contented, and intellectual. Be it so. But in that case there must have been a sad falling off, for in 1155 Henry II. sought and obtained permission of Pope Hadrian IV. to enter Ireland in order "to enlarge the bounds of the church, to enter ireland in order "to enlarge the bounds of the church, to restrain the progress of vices, to correct the manners of the people, to plant virtue among them, and to increase the Christian religion." Three centuries elapsed, and it needed "a faithful man of good name and fame" . . . "in English apparell" to stand voucher for any Celt who wanted to keep his head safe on his shoulders, instead of at the tip of a spear or the Charle of his shoulders, instead of at the tip of a spear or the Castle of Trim. But why harrow feelings with harrowing details? The history of Ireland is written in blood—it is undeniable. It needs not the skill of an advocate or the bias of a partizan to prove what all admit. Mr. Partridge in this portion of his work is beating the air. However, Ireland still kept her Parliament, and in 1783, says our Separatist author, "the political situation of Ireland underwent a total change, and her liberties and indepen-dence appeared finally recovered." And what use did she make of her freedom? Just this: that when it became manifest that the Union was "within the range of practical politics," this loyal, this devoted, this noble-hearted nation calmly invited the French to help them against the English! "An irretrievable error, which had Grattan's utmost opposition; but they had to fight against slavery," is the only explanation vouchsafed by Mr. Partridge. Others might be tempted to describe such conduct as an act of the blackest dye, worthy of the execration of every honest patriot, of every subject of the Queen, whose face can blush at treachery, and redden with shame at pure, unalloyed, indefensible disloyalty.

Then came the Union, upon which Mr. Fitzgerald empties the phials of his wrath. Not a soul escapes his scathing denunciations; and, lastly, the reader is invited to "a feast of reason and flow of soul" at the banquet of Home Rule. But our author carefully draws a veil over all that is disagreeable. No mention is made of the fire of rebellion which has rendered the heaven of civilisation lurid with the flames of murder, rapine, plunder, and crime—no, not a word about all this. It is enough to use the pen in drawing a flattering portrait of the "greatest man now living upon this planet"—aye, great enough to wreck a party, to mar his own reputation—but not great enough to ruin an empire, and cast down in the dust of humiliation the land which gave him birth, talents, and famo.

Thus much regarding the Irish Question depicted by a Separatist hand. Now let us contemplate the country in all its reality. This we are enabled to do, thanks to Mr. Amor Reade's most interesting and most timely novelette, which is, in reality, a series of sketches of Irish life thrown into the form of a story.

series of sketches of Irish life thrown into the form of a story.

In a quiet and secluded nook in Erin's island dwelt a young thrifty couple, Norah Moriarty and her husband Thade. Hard workers, industrious, and careful, the pair had managed not only to pay their way, but to put by a few pounds against a rainy day. Tenants on the estates of the Earl of Blankshire, an octogenarian, who had passed his life amidst the brooks and brases of the land, which was his pride and his support, they worshipped the hand that nurtured them; and when the noble owner's great nephew, Mr. Fitzgerald, who managed the property, led to the altar a fair maiden of the district, who was happier. led to the altar a tair maiden of the district, who was happier, who more proud, than Mistress Moriarty? But a cloud, no bigger than a man's hand, was on the horizon of destiny. There was a cry of famine in the land. "Ireland again sat a mendicant by the wayside begging, and into poor Erin's outstretched hands England poured her alms." Money flowed freely—for Britain's philanthropy knows no bounds—but political agitators seized the opportunity to whisper in the wilder tracts that the cause of all Irish woe was the rack-renting of the tenantry. The poisonous slander, magnified and intensified by unprincipled wolves in sheep's clothing, permeated rapidly through the life-blood of the nation, and at length the evil tale was wafted across the "silver streak," and poor deluded England accepted the theory as an intelligible solution of the oft-recurring Irish grievances. So it happened that when the General Election took place, Percy Fitz-gerald was opposed in the person of Denis Dymock, a grocer, who "having spent twenty years of his life weighing scant measure over his counter in Liverpool to the poor, now posed as one anxious to right Irish grievances." In the course of a few days every available piece of wall, every shed, every outbuilding was bedecked with a magnificent green poster promising "Home Rule" and "Ireland for the Irish" if only the populace would vote for the "merchant-prince"—alias the grocer. This latter burning patriot," too, found ready help in the person of Father Dan Prendergast, "an oleaginous, sleek-looking, more jovial than divine ecclesiastic," who to serve his own ends lent the support of the Church to the scheme of spoliation and robbery, which under the specious and sacred guise of "liberty" was now an active element in the politics of the hour. Then came the day of the election. Party feeling ran high; the "masses" had been set against the "classes," the baser feelings in men's hearts had been awakened, and when the numbers were declared—Dynock 210, Fitzgerald 200, the defeated candidate had to slink away unheeded, unnoticed. Such was the reward for centuries of kindness, of considerate attention to the wants, the feelings and the sympathies of a prosperous and contented tenantry.

This was the first fruits of Home Rule; but the seed germinated with prodigious fertility. It happened that a worthless, drunken, dissolute "ne'er-do-well" tenant on the Blankshire estates had been evicted to make room for a careful, sober, and industrious successor, able and willing to pay his way, and look his enemies straight in the face; but the "Home Rulers" demurred. So one fine night—these noble patriots never are visible during the day—some "Moonlighters" visited the new occupant, took the shirt off his back, beat him out of the house with furze bushes, and threw him, naked as he was born, into a neighbouring bog. Norah Moriarty and her husband, Thade, took no part in these proceedings; they scorned and despised the murderous folly, the criminal wickedness, of a band of ruffians who, under the guise of justice, were willing and ready to give vent to all the basest and most malignant feelings in the human breast. They held aloof; but as time wore on, and the National League began to gain strength, the husband soon found his posicion uncomfortable—indeed, perilous. On the one hand, he felt that if he did not throw in his lot with the "Moonlighters" it would not be many weeks before his own turn came; and he shuddered as he thought of the destruction of his beloved home-the insults, if nothing worse, to his wife; so he wavered. In appearance he became a "Leaguer;" in heart he continued as loyal, as honest a son of Erin as ever grow a potato or reared a pig.

So matters went on from worse to worse, and the whole district became a seething mass of rebellion. Not a soul was safe, not a person escaped the vortex of ruin; but to the many sins which had followed in the track of the new-fangled cry "Ireland for the Irish" was now added the crime of murder. Henceforward, Home Rule left a broad wake of blood on the ocean of human existence. The unfortunate victim was none other than Percy Fitzgerald, the heir to the Blankshire estates, who was shot through the head one night on his way to his home. This foul deed occasioned the most profound distress in the hearts of honest Norah Moriarty and her weak and wavering husband, Thade; so the former determined, if she could, to learn somewhat of the plans and methods of the new League. Accordingly, one eventful evening, at the peril of her life-peril of bogs, peril of bullets-she proceeded, in the dead of the night, and secreted herself in a cabin, where the "Invincibles" were wont to hold their meetings, so as to overhear their deliberations. She then discovered that the murder of the father had not quenched the desire for blood, but the entire Blankshire race was to be exterminated in the person of the infant heir, an inoffensive child but a few months old. The faithful creature flew, without delay, to the castle, and the tears coming into her eyes as she spoke, betraying the secret to the widow she loved, begged her to flee the country as a plague spot. The advice was accepted, and mother and child found refuge in Old England from the tender mercies of a patriotic League whose banners were reeking in blood, whose escutcheon was begrimed with gore.

Peor Norah was now herself in danger, and she in turn had to act upon the advice she had given to the widowed fugitive. So Thade and his wife turned their backs upon the land of their birth, upon the home of their childhood, upon the fields where they had been wont to wander, upon the lanes where they had courted, upon the sods which afforded a covering to their children! Desolate, disgusted, dispirited, Norah and Thade were too honest for the League, too upright to join hands with the "Home Rule" party—they migrated to America.

But vengeance was not yet satiated; the young Earl in embryo had, it is true, slipped from the clutches of a murderous peasantry, but he had not eluded the machinations of his enemies, if such a word rightly applies in the case of an infant of tender years—too young to know, too simple to understand. And one eventful morning he disappeared from the scene; the widowed mother was left desolate, and the Blankshire estates remained heirless and without a possessor.

The denouement we leave to the reader. Our concern has been chiefly with the thrilling tale of real life which Mr. Reade has given to the public; for if this story be an exaggerated invention of a fertile brain, its appearance at such a time would be a or a sertile brain, its appearance at such a time would be a violation of all laws of propriety, if not of common decency. And what a picture! Great God in Heaven! Can it be possible that these Moonlighters, these villains with whom nothing is sacred, nothing is safe; these miscreants who steep their hands in innocent blood as if it were the trickling rivulet at the hillside; these desperadoes who are dead to all the dictates of humanity, are to become the rulers of Ireland, to govern honest men, to make laws for the repression of crime and the punishment of wickedness and vice? Is this the interpretation of "Home Rule?" Is this the new-fangled cure for Eriz's woes? Is this the statesmanship of the hour? If so, every patriot, every being who can sympathise with suffering and comfort the desolate, every Englishman who cares nought for party triumphs, but loves justice and hates iniquity, must, on bended knees, thank the Ruler of Heaven and Earth that the good sense of the nation has saved Britain from a stigma which would cling to it throughout ages, yet far to come, had the curse of "Home Rule" been allowed to have swept from the shores of Ireland all that is respectable, all that is honest, all that raises humanity above the level of the beasts of the field or the brutes of the forest.

THE INDIAN MAGAZINE.*

Want of space has prevented our calling attention to these later issues of this excellent Magazine, and renders it impossible even now to do more than remark on some of the more important articles which they have contained.

To facilitate "Woman's Work in the East" is, in importance To facilitate "Woman's Work in the East" is, in importance second to none among the many benevolent objects aimed at by the National Indian Association, and we cannot be surprised if we find many papers devoted to the subject. While some are chronicles of very gratifying progress in perhaps the most beneficent enterprises ever undertaken in any age or country; those, we mean, of raising in social position the women of Hindustan, and of alleviating their sufferings in sickness—and are, therefore, most encouraging,† others are of a highly practical character. Among these, we would single out, for their sensible suggestions, the note appended (p. 373) to Mrs. Turkhud's interesting, and all-too-short, narrative of "A Visit to a Zenana," and Captain Temple's lecture on the "Everyday Life of Indian Women," delivered, last spring, before the Society of Arts.

Dr. Francis has laid the future lady-doctors of India under obligation, by his much-needed hints how European medical obligation, by his much-needed hints how European medical ladies should act in order to preserve, in a climate so different from their own, that health which is of the very essence of their efficiency. These hints, continued through several numbers of the periodical, are so simply and plainly worded as to be by no means esoteric: and are, therefore, the more valuable to the casual traveller whose medical knowledge is represented by zero. We hope that these excellent papers (concluded in the August number) will be reprinted as a brockure for wider circulation. amongst the yearly increasing number of visitors to our grand Dependency; a number which the Great Show, soon about to close, cannot fail to augment. One hint is surely worth attention: whether it might not be well for the Government "to charter, every invaliding season, a certain number of suitable vessels for the conveyance home of selected sick soldiers who are likely to benefit by the passage round the Cape? "The sea voyage," wisely observes the Doctor, "might make all the difference between the man's complete recovery and furre useful.

ference between the man's complete recovery and future usefulness, and his becoming a permanently chronic, and possibly helpless, invalid" (p. 482).

The "Condition of the Indian Musulmans" is depicted in somewhat dark colours by one of themselves, Mr. K. Abdul Ali, of the Muhammadan Anglo Oriental College at Aligarh, N.W.P., who points out with sound judgment the causes which have led to their being so often dérancés by the more flexible, though not always more versatile, Hindu. In few communities has the adage "Union is strength" been more completely treated "as though it were not;" and it is to an enlightened sense, on the part of the Indian Musulmans, of the essential identity of look as the sine qud non for the improvement of their condition.

Mr. Colquheun Grant, in a few well-written sentences, calls attention to the general state of the Eurasians, a race afflicted with that terrible burden "genteel poverty." As Mr. Grant points out, "they cannot dig, to beg they are ashamed." And he very earnestly endeavours to enlist the sympathy of the English in India in favour of the "poor always with us, and poor that are, so to speak, one with us, coming from the same stock, of the same faith, speaking the same language, and yet poor, despised, down-trodden." Verily, in their case the sins of the fathers have been visited on the children.

Nor are the Parsees neglected in this excellent Magazine, which well fulfils its object of diffusing information and doing good "all well fulfils its object of diffusing information and doing good "all round." Mr. Ginwalla's treatise—concluded in the last issue—on this, on the whole, most prosperous community, is exceedingly interesting; and, though it contains nothing absolutely new to a "Bombay Duck," will convey to many readers information of which they were previously ignorant.

THE "Illustrated Naval and Military Magazine" for October (W. H. Allen and Co.) contains some articles of more than passing interest, and shows improvement in illustrations. The "Landsknechte in the Sixteenth Century"—the coloured frontispiece—is the first of a promised series of delineations of the costumes of foreign transportations of the costumes. of foreign troops during different epochs of history, accompanied by appropriate letterpress. The first instalment is also given of another series of illustrated papers—"The Early English Army"—intended to deal with the gradual growth and formation of the British army into a standing force. The "Austrian Siege Artillery Matériel" is a paper which at the present moment ought to be attractive reading, and so, perhaps, ought "Notes on the Cavalry of the Belgian Army," had praise been a little tempered. "A Day at Corunna and a Visit to the Grave of Sir John Mooro" is from the pen of a lady who surely over-estimates the ignorance of mankind, military or other, in stating that not only is very little known about the hero of Corunna, but that 'there are very few persons who so much as know the name of the place where he fell fighting for his country!" Professional readers of the magazine might, perhaps, like to see more space given to "Inventions applicable to the requirements of Her Majesty's Naval and Military Forces," and less given to personalities in which they have no concern. An ably-conducted Service magazine, well and correctly illustrated—and this magazine aims at that high standard—not only deserves success, but ought to command it. of foreign troops during different epochs of history, accompanied but ought to command it.

THE latest news from Nepal is that the prospects of the crors are still fair, but that some fine weather is now required.

A TELEGRAM has been received in Bombay stating that a meeting was held on the 12th ult. at Colombo to protest against the cession of the Padroado Churches to the Propaganda. Great excitement is said to prevail throughout the island.

IT appears that we have an Irish tenant difficulty and Scotch Trappears that we have a small scale in our little island of Bombay. The fishermen of Worlee are threatened with increase of rent or ejectment by their superior landlord, and 3,000 or 4,000 inhabitants of the village are up in arms about it. It seems that the villagers and their ancestors have built the village at their own expense and lived in their houses all their lives, dealing with them as they thought fit, and paying a small ground-rent to the landlord or fazandar. But the fazandaree rights have changed hands, and a new king has come to reign over them, seeking, as is not unnatural, to increase his rent-roll, and not only that, but to turn out his tenant's at a month's notice if he chooses upon paying them for their handless only them for their buildings only.

THE MADRAS SCANDALS.

No apology is needed on the part of a public journal connected with India for inviting attention to the so-called "Madras Scandals" which have attracted to the "Sleepy Presidency" a concentration of public opinion but rarely stowed upon affairs of lesser importance than a war or a rumour of war. Nor is this surprising. Amongst the wonders-we use the word advisedly-of the East, not the least is the circumstance that a handful of settlers should have reared an edifice of dominion which, under the auspices of the twenty-four magnates in Leadenhall-street. attained colossal proportions, but which, under the sovereignty of the Empress of India, became a mighty Empire, the brightest jewel in England's diadem. And how was this achieved? Of course the prowess of our soldiers, the skill of a Clive, an Eyre Coote, a Harris, a Lake, a Gough, and many more of lesser fame, contributed in no small degree to establish the sway of Great Britain over the peoples of Ind. They laid the foundation of monarchy, but it devolved upon the Civil Service of the Company to complete the structure by sound administration, by careful legislation, and, above all, by scrupulous uprightness and integrity. Right nobly did the splendid body of men who generation after generation sat on the seat of power acquit themselves of the stupendous task which destiny had laid upon them. A finer service the world has never witnessed, alike in point of ability as with regard to the code of honour, which made the coveted initials "C.S." serve as a passport for spotless purity of motive and unsullied honesty of purpose.

But let there be but a taint, a mere suspicion of underhand dealing on the part of those in high places, and we venture to predict that the downfall of our Empire in the East will be as rapid and conspicuous as was its rise. Hence the flutter in men's minds, the alarm, the surmises occasioned by the scandals in Madras. On the one hand: there is a member of Council, honoured by his Sovereign at the close of a long and unsullied career with a token of Royal approbation, who now stands charged with unbecoming conduct. He is either foully libelled, or unworthy of his position. On the other hand is an officer of high standing and avowed ability said to be crushed by "influence" used to ruin a man at once hated and feared. Here, again, the charge is either true, or as untrue, discreditable to the gentleman who prefers it. In these circumstances there is obviously no opportunity for compromise. The Secretary of State or his predecessor may or may not, as is publicly supposed, have been under some misapprehensions as to the facts of the case. Be it so; but the matter must be sifted to the bottom, regardless of consequence to all parties interested. Nothing less will satisfy public opinion-nothing less would be fair to the outgoing Governor, who should not, in common fairness, be charged on landing with a task which is not only profoundly disagreeable, but which affects the fair name of at least one member of his government charged to advise, to counsel, and to enlighten. Mr. Bourke could have no personal knowledge of the affairs of a Presidency which he would only just have commenced to administer; and he could not hope to get to the bottom of an inquiry which must, of necessity, be entrusted to some extent to other hands to pursue. In the interest, therefore, of justice, of expediency, of fair play to the new Governor, and, lastly, of manly independence and sincerity of purpose, let the scandals be sifted to the bottom. Let the innocent escape, and the guilty be punished; let the Service be purged, and England's fair name in the East stand henceforth unsullied, and, as of yore, the pride, the glory, and the boast of the civilised world.

THE HON. W. W. HUNTER, before proceeding to Bombay on his way to England, visited British and Native Nimar in the Central Provinces, to inquire into the land reclamations.

STERLING LIFE POLICIES AND RUPEE PAYMENTS.

CEYLON is at present considerably agitated about a matter in which Life Assurance Offices in England and policy-holders in the colony are seriously interested. There are many Anglo-Indians now at home who must remember the commotion which was caused in India when the ill-fated Albert Assurance Company came to grief, and brought so much loss and sorrow to insurers in the East; but the question now is happily not one affecting the solvency of a great Company, although it is one which, from the view of the insured, is held to affect the good faith of one of the best known institutions of the kind amongst insurers. The "Standard Life Assurance Com. pany" has recently issued to its policy-holders in Ceylon Bonus certificates, expressing the amounts insured and the bonuses thereon in rupees in cases in which the policies themselves have been expressed in pounds sterling, and in some cases in pounds sterling, payable in the United Kingdom without any option either to the Company or to the policy-holder to pay it anywhere else or in any other currency. This proceeding has provoked an immense amount of indignation amongst local insurers. A most voluminous correspondence in the local Press, and a public meeting of those interested has taken place at Colombo, at which resolutions were passed condemning the action of the Company, and sanctioning the opening up of litigation in case an amicable arrangement cannot be come to.

The question is not a very intricate one as argued from the side of the policy-holders, but it is likely that the Company can furnish equally plausible arguments too, and that in the end the matter will have to be decided by the Courts.

It appears that from the time when the rupee was made the sole standard of value in Ceylon (January 1, 1872), and it was enacted that in all contracts or legal engagements the sum of ten rupees should thereafter be taken as the equivalent to the £. sterling, the majority of policyholders in various British insurance offices which had branches in Ceylon instead of continuing to pay premia in sterling as heretofore began to make payment in rupees at the rate of ten rupees to the £., which practice has obtained until now. A few policy-holders have paid in rupees at the exchange of the day, and with these no question against the companies has arisen. Standard office now objects to pay policies when due in sterling when the premiums are paid in rupees, or to express the amount on the bonus certificates except in rupees. The policy-holders declare that hitherto the receipts given to them from the head office in London acknowledged the payment of premia in sterling, although the amount was paid in Ceylon in rupees at the old fixed contract rate of ten rupees to the £. sterling. When that rate was fixed the value of silver was high in the island, and it is now argued that the company then gained, and that therefore it has no right, moral or legal, now because silver has fallen to go behind the contracts which have up to now been unquestioned. "The "Standard" appears at present to be the only Company which has moved in the matter, but it is evidently a question seriously affecting all the Insurance Companies at home who, receiving premia in rupees, are supposed to pay policies or bonuses in sterling. The fact that certain premia have been accepted at the rate of exchange of the day, and no difference made in favour of their policy-holders compared with those who paid the premia in rupees, is one which requires some elucidation.

This will no doubt be forthcoming when the arguments in favour of the Company's interpretation of the contracts is known. But as the matter stands there is an amount of hot temper being displayed in Ceylon amongst journalists, correspondents, and speakers, which is to be regretted. It can hardly help to a satisfactory solution to heap opprobrious names upon Institutions which hold a high place in the commercial world, not only for honourable, but for liberal dealing with their constituents. That the matter has not been found capable of an amicable arrangement is a misfortune regarded from either side. It has opened up other questions—notably that of the rates of premia charged for life assurance in India-but these questions are for the moment beside the matter in dispute. They cannot, however, be lost sight of, and we shall touch upon them in due course.

THE Burman never used a gun for amusement. When he intended to hit he always shut his eyes, threw his head over his left shoulder, pulled the trigger, and trusted that the bullet would hit the person aimed at; if it did not, the conclusion arrived at was that the enemy wore a charm, and not that the aim had been rad, which no Boh would ever admit. Now, however, they are beginning to know that the proper way is to look along the barrel of the gun at the person aimed at. Of course, the cap guns with which they are now semed were then in the palace, and flint lock guns were then used. The Burman preferred the flint gun, because flint could always be obtained, which was not so with caps. Powder was easily made as sulphur could be procured at Myinmu and Alon from the earth, and saltpetre was obtained in the local markets being used as a medicing for elephants. Lead the local markets, being used as a medicine for elephants. Lead was scarce; but now that the telegraph lines are laid anyone can get as much as he requires for the taking.

TECHNICAL EDUCATION.—We must prepare the youth of India for learning their trades, just as the English public school prepares a young man for his profession, but does not teach it to him. We cannot go beyond this, except on a very limited scale, and with the aid of special local interests—such an interest, for instance, as that of a Municipality which might be moved to sustain a technical school for the benefit of the particular manufacture of the district. Mr. Justice West indicated the true line on which a scheme of technical education should be laid out when, in condemning the too largely literary character that is given to a young man for his profession, but does not teach it to him. condemning the too largely literary character that is given to higher education in India, he urged that "stillit should be education, aiming at making the mind robust and flexible rather than at shabbily decking it with some rays of 'business information' or low technic skill.' There ought to be small danger of any such wrong aim being pursued as Mr. West here indicated. Education should be the strong point of the Government of Bombay under the present régime; and though, as we know on the highest authority it has taken technical education into its most highest authority, it has taken technical education into its most diligent consideration, we have no fear that the proposals which may come from Poona in the next few weeks will favour methods of teaching too technical to have any really educational character. -Bombay Gazette.

MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

THE strength of the garrison of the Bori Valley, whose duty it will be to guard the Sind-Pishin Railway from attacks from the north, has now been settled at a regiment of Native cavalry, one of infantry, and one Native mountain battery.

THE Government of India has determined to re-arm Kohat with the five twelve-pounder breech-loading guns which were removed in 1833.

It has been decided to consider again the question of a defensive position in Pishin and on the Khojak Range. Captain Broadbent, R.E., of the Military Department, will probably visit Quetta and the neighbourhood during the ensuing cold weather, and report fully upon the proposed fort and lines.

Owing to so many of the Medical Staff being under orders for service in Burma, it has been considered necessary to recall the whole of the medical officers who are on leave from the Peshawar Division.

The Scoretary of State for India has sanctioned the Commander-in-Chief's proposal for the entire equipment of the 18th Bengal Cavalry with the lance, and for the change of the designation of the regiment to Lancers.

In has been ruled that the balance of a regimental voyage pay list, on the arrival of corps in this country, shall be exchanged at the rate fixed annually by Her Majesty's Government for the payment of British troops in the Colonies.

MARRIED Army Schoolmistresses, who were serving in India on the 1st April, 1885, are allowed to make remittances Home from their pay at the exchange of 2s. Old. the rupee. In the event of any such schoolmistress becoming a widow, her remittances will be admissible at the rate of exchange fixed annually by Her Majesty's Government for the payment of British troops serving in the Colonies.

MEDICAL Officers who have been allowed to remain in the service after attaining the age of 55 years are, during the period of extended service, only to be allowed sick or privilege leave.

On the retirement of Major Dunn, Superintendent British Army Schools, Bengal, which will shortly take place, the appointments of Director of Garrison Instruction in India and Superintendent British Army Schools, Bangal, will be amalgamated, the duties of the latter appointment being performed by the former, who will be allowed a Staff salary of Rs. 800 a month, in addition to Staff Corps pay. The Director of Garrison Instruction in India and Superintendent British Army Schools (what a title for a card or cover!) will be allowed an Assistant Superintendent from among the Sub-Inspectors of Army Schools, Bengal, who will be allowed a special extra allowance of Rs. 100 per mensem, in addition to pay of rank, with the sanction of the Secretary of State for India. This new arrangement will take effect from the 1st proximo.

OBITUARY.

LIEUTENANT-GENERAL CHARLES MALCOLM BARROW, C.B., late of the Bombay Staff Corps, died on October 7th at his residence in West Cromwell-road, South Kensington, aged sixty-seven years. He entered the Bombay Army in 1837, and served in the campaign of 1838-9 in Scind and Afghanistan. He was present at the storming and capture of Ghuznee, and took part in the attack on the stronghold of the Afghan Chief, Ruheem Khan. He was promoted to a captaincy in 1843, and subsequently served in the Punjab campaign, including the siege and surrender of Mooltan, the battle of Goojerat, and the pursuit and surrender of the Sikh Army. He commanded the 19th Bombay Native Infantry while employed against the Gwalior mutineers under Tantia Topee, the Rao Sahib, and the Nawab of Banda in the Rajpootana States in 1858 in the pursuit through Malwa, Bundelkund, and Central India. He was also engaged in the actions of Rajghur, Mungrowlee, Sindwaho, and Kura. He obtained the rank of major in 1861, lieutenant-colonel in 1863, colonel in 1868, major general in 1830, and lieutenant-general in 1892. He was nominated a Companion of the Order of the Bath in 1873, and was placed on the unemployed supernumerary list in 1881. General Barrow married Euphemia, daughter of the late Mr. J. Leckie, of Manchester square, but was left a widower in 1880.

The Lahore Tramway Company, Limited.—Its capital is set down on the prospectus as two lakhs, in two thousand shares of Rs. 100 each. It will, undoubtedly, prove a profitable speculation, for the simple reason that Luhore is the junction for three distinct railway lines, and the railway station is three miles distant from Anarkulli and other important parts of the city. It is stated that the gross receipts for one year will probably be about Rs. 72,000, and the working expenses (at 56 per cent.) Rs. 40,320. This would leave a credit balance of Rs. 31,680, or nearly 16 per cent upon the capital required. Consequent upon these figures, Messrs. Robson and Co., the managing proprietors, have undertaken to guarantee 8 per cent. per annum for three years on the capital. The first issue of one thousand shares allotted some time ago has been readily taken up, and the second issue will be made in November or December. Operations have already begun in the way of laying steel rails at the railway station end, and it is expected that the cars will be running from there to the Delhi Gate by October. There is much enthusiasm among the Natives, who are largely represented on the list of shareholders, and there is every prospect of the Lahore Tramway Company proving a distinct and decided success.

Double Murder in Burma.—Our correspondent in Rangoon telegraphs:—"The particulars of the murder in Moulmein of Father Biet and a Mr. Ramos, a money-lender, have reached here. The victims were sitting in the latter's house about seven in the evening, when a servant girl said that a Chinaman and three Burmans wished to speak to them. Mr. Ramos went into the verandah, when a shot was fired at him, and missed him; but his assailant closed with him, and stabbed him in several places in the chest and abdomen. Father Biet was then attacked, and four shots were fired at him, all taking effect. The priest appears to have struggled hard and desperately, for the marks of his footsteps have been traced in blood from the door where, after being shot, he was stabbed by other assailants, to the bottom of the verandah steps, where he sank from exhaustion caused by loss of blood. The lifeless bodies were subsequently found by Mrs. Ramos, who escaped by her bathroom stair, and secured refuge in the house of a Chinaman situated immediately behind hers. From the fact of a turban belonging to a Burman being found immediately beneath her window it is thought that the murderers followed Mrs. Ramos to complete their work had she not found friendly shelter. The police, when they came on the spot, found the bodies warm, but life extinct. Near Father Biet an open clasp knife, stained with blood, was found. On forcing open the door of an opium den near the house, and of which Mr. Ramos had often complained to the police, a Chinaman was found lying concealed beneath the flooring, and a cloth with fresh blood on it in his possession. A post-mortem examination showed that Mr. Ramos had eleven severe and deep stabs inflicted on him, and the priest had received four gunshot wounds and nine deep stabs. Two arrests have been made, and Rs. 500 have been offered as a reward for information which will lead to the arrest of the murderers, with pardon to anyone connected with the crime, but not the actual murderer. The avaricious grasping treatment o

INDIA.

THERE are in England large classes willing and anxious to do justice to India, but they find it very difficult to know how to act. They complain that Indian questions are intricate; that the opinions of official experts are contradictory; and that the people of India are dumb, and do not give expression to their needs. This defect is now remedied by publishing montruly (in Bombay) a magazine somewhat similar in nature to Public Opinion in England, which provides a compendium of all that is most valuable in the native journals throughout India on the leading topics of the day. The Yoice of India thus gives forth a clear sound, interpreting between the rulers and the ruled, and making known the true wishes and feelings of the Indian people.

ing between the rulers and the ruled, and making known the true wishes and feelings of the Indian beople.

The Magazine advocates no views of its own. It seeks only to reflect with care and accuracy the views set forth in the native press. The Indian people are naturally docile and consorvative; and it will be seen that the writings thus brought before the English public are characterised by a knowledge of facts, and generally by practical good sense and moderation. No doubt grievances are from time to time being set forth; but it is a policy of prudence, no less than of justice to give these grievances a fair constitutional hearing. Accordingly, it is hoped that this publication will be subscribed for by Members of Parliament and other public men desirous of dealing with Indian questions, and that the facts thus brought together in a convenient form will be of value to iournalists and other public writers. It is specially desired to bring the Magazine before the public in Clubs, Reading-rooms, Libraries, and Institutes throughout England, with a view to promote a sustained and intelligent interest in the welfare of our Indian Empire, comprising as it does 220 millions of our fellow-subjects.

H. G. KEENE,

Author of "Peepul Leaves," "Under the Rose," &c.

"Mr. Keene has not, we believe, a great reputation in England as yet, but in India he seems to be well known."—PALL MALL GAZETTE.

"Mr. Keene's is no untried hand. Well known as a poet in North-Western India, in this volume there is nothing to gainsay his right to the name. . . Often swoot and graceful, always vigorous and thoughtful, his verses possess the true lyric swing."—Queen.

"He has a gift of sweet and pathetic expression which endows his lyrical efforts with a charm and fresh-ness quite their own."—Home News.

"We think Mr. Keene is at his best when original; and prefer the latter half of the book to the translations with which the first part is filled."—Oxford TATLER.

"It is impossible to avoid being struck, not only with their beauty and tenderness, but with the fact that they are almost throughout in a minor key. . . Very sweet, very beautiful, but very sad."—Allen's Indian Mail.

"To our mind Mr. Keene's original verses are more likely to bring him fame and give his readers pleasure. There is always point and interest in them, even in the shortest."-- Literary World.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 19, 1886.

General Intelligence.

[By Overland Mail.]

THE Overland Mail brings us letters and advices from Bombay to the 1st October; from Allahabad and Madras to the 29th September; and from Calcutta to the 28th September.

THE DUKE AND DUCHESS OF CONNAUGHT have arrived in Bombay by the mail-steamer Bengal. Their Royal Highnesses received an address by the Municipal Corporation at the Apollo Bunder immediately on landing, but the other arrangements for a public reception fell through.

After spending a day at Government House, Malabar Hill, their Royal Highnesses left by the evening mail for Poona, where they take part in a number of public ceremonies.

THE DUKE AND DUCHESS OF CONNAUGHT are expected at Simla about the middle of October on a short visit to the Viceroy.

THE DUKE OF CONNAUGHT has been invited to be present at the ceremony of laying the foundation stone of the Punjab Chiefs' College at Lahore, in November.

THE arrangements for the Viceroy's cold weather tour have been completed. Great preparations are being made for his reception at Hyderabad.

'Some disappointment is felt at Madras at the report that the Viceroy will not visit that city during his forthcoming tour in the Southern Presidency. His Excellency will visit Hyderabad, Bangalore, Mysore, Octacamund, Cooncor, Coimbatore, Trichinopoly, Madura, and Tanjore, embarking at Negapatam for Calcutta.

UPPER BURMA has been placed under the administration of the Chief Commissioner of Lower Burma, who will henceforth be styled Chief Commissioner of Burma.

The troops from India are rapidly arriving in Burma. They are all to leave Rangoon for Upper Barma by the 11th October.

THE engineering staff of the Mandalay-Tounghoo Railway Survey have been warned to leave Upper Burma by the 10th October, showing that Government wish to commence operations as soon as possible.

A GOVERNMENT launch plied between Tounghoo and Mingyan had to fight her way through 1,500 dacoits. Of the armed guard on board, on policeman was killed and seven wounded. It is believed that sixteen dacoits were killed.

MUCH dissatisfaction is felt in Rangoon owing to the Government of India disposing of the ruby mines without offering them for public competition.

LIEUT.-COLONEL McIVER, attached to the 5th Madras Infantry, has died from senstroke in Upper Burma.

H.E. SIR FREDERICK ROBERTS has started from Simla on his first winter tour.

THE British troops in the 1st Army Corps for service on the North-West Frontier will be the first in India to receive the Martini-Enfield rifle.

SIR J. WEST RIDGEWAY is to go to London after his return to India, in order to give necessary information on the question of Kham-i-Ab.

QUETTA has returned to its narmal healthiness, there having been no spidemic disease this season beyond the usual bilious fever known as country fever, which extends all over the country, and is not peculiar to Quetta, and is disagreeable rather than dangerous. Sir O. St. John's escort suffered severely from it, one-third of the men being in hospital; and the Agent himself had one attack which lasted three days.

Mr. Garstin has obtained the permission of the local Government to take proceedings against the Madras paper for its strictures on his share in the Crole case.

It is probable that the scheme of an Imperial Institute for India and the Colonies, of which the Heir-Apparent is to be permanent president, will be taken up vigorously by the Government of India.

THE six months' net returns fron Indian State Railways are about 50 lakhs better than the Budget Estimate. By the end of a year they will no doubt be 80 lakhs better, perhaps more. This, and the considerable recovery in sterling exchange from its lowest point, an up-country paper remarks, may help to lift the Finance Minister a little way out of the slough of despond.

What a Home paper says about Sir Frederick Roberts having urgently demanded "a large additional supply" of European officers for the Indian Army, is said to be of large exaggeration. The Commander-in-Chief, as was already tolerably well known, recommended to Government that one more British officer should be given to each Native regiment, both Cavalry and Infantry.

THE Bill to prevent the adulteration of ghee has been passed by the Bengal Council, and its scope has been extended to all the Municipalities in Bengal.

THE Government of India have addressed a circular letter to the local Governments suggesting the advisability of undertaking generally legislation similar to that introduced by the Bengal Government with a view to checking the sale of adulterated articles of food.

At the Madras High Court judgment was recently delivered by a full bench of five judges in the matter of the petition of the Hon. Edward Sullivan, complaining of the conduct of Mr. Eardley Norton, barrister-at-law. The Court were of opinion that Mr. Norton had not exceeded his privileges as an advocate, and, therefore, dismissed the petition.

The official report from Upper Burma, for the week ending 26th September, states that Mandalay town is very quiet. Bhamo, Shwebo, Ava, Kyankse, Pagan, and Myingyan districts are also generally quiet. In Mandalay district some Shan raids from the hills have occurred. Precautionary measures have been taken against the rumoured designs of Wuntho Sawbwa on the Katha border. In the Yen district expeditions in the northern tracts proved very successful. Minhla Maung Hmat has been forced to retreat, his force having suffered severe losses, and that portion of the district in which the new post has been established is now quiet. Five leading men in the southern part of the district have tendered their submission. In Sagaing measures are being taken against Hla U and Min O's gangs. In Pagan the villagers have beaten off the dacoits. In Yemethin the troops repulsed Kyimyindaing's force. In Ningya considerable gangs are collected to the east of the Sinthe and Sittang rivers. On the 18th a body of 200 men attacked Ningyan, but were driven off with a loss of five killed.

FEVER was very prevalent in the Central Provinces last year, no less than 170,634, out of the total number of deaths (301,684), or a ratio of 1935 per mille, being attributable to that cause. Mr. Fitzpatrick, the officiating Chief Commissioner, has, in consequence of this severe mortality, requested the Sanitary Commissioner and the tivil surgeons to take special care to observe whether fever prevails most in jungly or in cultivated tracts, on highland or on lowlands, on black cotton soil or elsewhere. The effect of a break in the rains upon fever is also, Mr. Fitzpatrick thinks, a point which should be carefully observed in future. He further suggests that good might be effected by distributing medicines as is now done where cholera prevails.

Notes of the Week.

ALTHOUGH the appointment of Sir Lepel Griffin to the Lieutenant-Governorship of the Punjab had not been officially announced when the present mail left, it seems that such appointment has been taken for granted. And it has been generally approved of. No man has stronger claims to this position, and those who know Sir Lepel know that he will not disappoint the brilliant hopes which his friends hold regarding his future. Few men have been more misunderstood than he has been; possibly because the fault was more with himself than with others. Sometimes he seemed to take a delight in allowing this misunderstanding to prevail. He has permitted men to go away with the impression that he was a coxcomb or an idler, simply because he thought it wise to laugh at fools and to answer them as King Solomon advised-according to their folly. But this does not always do in India where fools are many and wise men few. Lepel Griffin is a man of brains and energy, who would have found opportunities to bring himself to the front, even had fortune been adverse to him, which she has not been. As Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab he will be the strong man in the right place, especially at this time, when dangers threaten our North-West Frontier of India.

SIR ROPER LETHBRIDGE, M.P., according to the Journalist—a paper just started by "gentlemen of the Press" for "gentlemen of the Press"—proceeds to India for the purpose of making arrangements for the production of an Anglo-Indian journal at home. Does Sir Roper find that there is still no balm in Gilead? Do none of the papers already published for Anglo-Indian readers come up to his requirements? If, however, with his gifts of literary skill and official experience he can produce a paper which will make English readers take a more abiding interest in Indian subjects, we shall not be the last in bidding the new birth a welcome.

The refusal of H.R.H. the Prince of Wales to accept the personal testimonial which it was proposed to offer to him by certain well-meaning officials of the South Kensington Exhibition has met with general approval in India. The Bombay Gazette says with reference to the matter:—

We anticipated at the time the project was started that the Prince of Wales would give no countenance to it, and this might have been foreseen by any one who had regard to the shrewdness and savoir faire which invariably characterise the Prince's public acts. It would have been a bad precedent, this testimonialising, for public service, of a Prince who has always readily recognised that public service is an inseparable part of his duty, and who might have been presumed to need no other recognition of his work than the abundant approval of his fellow-countrymen. The testimonial has not been particularly successful in this country. This will be at once understood as in no sense casting doubt upon the popularity of the Prince of Wales. But it is the natural result of an enterprise undertaken with lamentable indiscretion, and with a very inadequate regard for what was due and appropriate in recognising the good work that has been done by the Heir Apparent in connection with the Exhibition. The diversion of the tunds subscribed for a personal testimonial to the proposed Colonial and Indian Institute will atone for the error that has been committed, and will help forward a work of Imperial utility.

The formation of a Reserve for the Indian Army is a matter upon which our military contemporaries were not likely to be silent. The United Service Gazette says:—
"It has amounted almost to a scandal that hitherto no attempt whatever has been made to maintain a Reserve of any description to any arm of the Indian troops. Regiments, when ordered on service, have been completed by volunteers from other corps, who in turn had to rely on 'recruiting' to fill up the gaps thus left in their ranks. Casualities and invaliding while on service have been similarly fed, to the grave detriment of the corps whose ranks were thus attenuated to meet these demands. Many have been the suggestions put forward to supply the want of a Reserve, but most have been stranded on the 'finance' aspect of the question. The need, however, has daily grown into such enormous proportions that Lord Dufferin has apparently been compelled to accede to the entreaties which, we are sure, General Roberts must have urged."

We regret that we have not space for the insertion of certain papers forwarded to us by Sir Thomas Symonds, Admiral of the Fleet, with regard to the present shortcomings of our naval strength. The papers are more fitted for a service journal. But no one can call into question Sir Thomas Symonds's authority to write on a subject which he has studied practically and theoretically for upwards of sixty years. He says:—"I sorrowfully stake my professional reputation on the correctness of my view that if France declared war against us, our trade would be utterly ruined, and disaster occur unless we take timely precaution by adding largely to our naval forces."

The question of emigration is one of the un solved problems of the hour. India, even in its hill stations, offers, as we have said before—in spite of contrary opinion—no field for the young man who wants to make his way, quickly and with some profit to himself, in the world. The young woman who goes to India may find a husband, but the young man who goes there simply trusting to fortune may find himself simply befooled. But there are other places where he may go to with ample chance of success. A company has just been started on new and promising lines, called "The Emigrants' Self-Supporting Emigration Society," which seems to offer considerable advantages to "our boys" and others who look towards other lands for future fame or fortune. This society has been established upon strictly commercial principles to facilitate emigration amongst the industrial classes, and particularly to secure them practically a free passage to the Colonies upon prescribed conditions upon their own independent efforts without being a charitable measure. The object which the society has in view, and which it seems to have made excellent arrangements to carry out, is, amongst other advantages, to enable emigrants "to acquire, cultivate, and deal in land, colonise the same, create townships and set tlements, act as farmers, agriculturists, cattle breeders, general traders, &c." The scheme, which has as its chief patron the Duke of Manchester, promises well—in lands where Europeans can work and thrive—but India is not one of these. English colonisation of Indian hill sites is a dream—but this company can help "our boys" to better fields for industry and ambition than the field of the now gathered pagoda-tree.

The Madras Scandals.—The Madras correspondent of the Pioneer writes strongly regarding Lord Kimberley's despatch on the Crole case. He says:—Not improbably Lord Kimberley may feel he has been cajoled into an expression of opinion on inefficient materials. At any rate some action should be taken. Is it or is it not true that the Hon. Mr. H. E. Sullivan has violated the covenant of his order? Is it or is it not true that the father was implicated in the attempted sale by his son to the Zemindar of Ramnad? These are facts capable of easy proof or disproof. And they should be set at rest one way or the other, and once for all. The spectacle of a Government numbering among its adherents a gentleman acutely alive to the pecuniary advantage of palming off old screws on unsuspicious Native widows, late his own cestus que trustent; of another gentleman who Mr. Kotesawmy Tevar has openly accused of being concerned in a "swindle carefully plotted beforehand"; and of a third who does not scruple to use a minor, officially committed to his care for the purpose of venting his spleen on Mr. Crole: such a spectacle is not calculated to increase the public reverence for abstract honour or to heighten its love and admiration of Her Majesty's rule. And the decadence in high places is undoubtedly bearing fruit. We see the Hon. Mr. Sullivan sheltered against inquiry: protected against hostile action. His honour has been called in question. Yet he moves not. The agis of a Governor wards him from evil consequences. We can obtain no hearing: we can procure no redress. When effect cannot conduct such as this have upon the public mind but to breed a bitter sense of contempt for those who dare not let the truth be known? Five thousand a month and the reversion of a comfortable pension are the lot of him who has been publicly accused of most serious moral delinquency. His victim has been shroffed of Rs. 15,000! This is precisely the sort of treatment which stirs up sentiments and passions that a wise politician would seek to leave undistu

(BY TELEGRAPH.) (Times Correspondents.) INDIA.

CALCUTTA, OCT. 17.

There was no renewal of the riots at Delhi and Etawah last week. Much anxiety was felt at Delhi on the 8th and 9th, which were the last two days of Mohurrum, the Mahomedans being greatly exasperated by the action of some Hindoos, who had tied a dead pig to the pulpit of the chief mosque. The garrison had been reinforced from Meerut, and both days passed quietly, no attempt being made to disturb the processions. It may be hoped that no more riots will occur, although the excitement is still great among both parties. The casualties, it is believed, include three Mahomedans and five Hindoos killed, and seventeen Mahomedans and six Hindoos wounded. There has been no open outbreak at any other station, although feeling is said to run high at Ludhiana, Mooltan, and other cities in the Punjab.

The Government has published a long resolution on the subject of infant marriage and enforced widowhood. It states that copies of Mr. Malabari's notes on the subject were circulated to the local administrations. The replies received were unanimously against adopting any legislative action. The Governor-General in Council agrees with this conclusion. When caste or custom lays down a rule which is clearly opposed to morality or public policy the State will decline to enforce it; but when caste or custom lays down a rule which deals with matters such as are usually left to the option of citizens, and which does not need the aid of the civil or criminal courts for its enforcement. State interference is There was no renewal of the riots at Delhi and Etawah last the option of citizens, and which does not need the aid of the civil or criminal courts for its enforcement, State interference is not considered desirable or expedient. The test is, can the State give effect to its commands with the ordinary machinery at its disposal? If the test be applied in the present case, the reasons will be apparent why the Government thinks State interference undesirable. Reforms which affect the social customs of many races must be left to the improving influences of the time and the gradual spread of education.

The travelling portion of the Finance Committee, having completed its inquiries in Madras, arrived in Calcutta on Wednesday, and has since proceeded to Darjeeling to confer with the Bengal Government. The members referred to will return to Calcutta for the purpose of drawing up a report, which will, it is expected, be ready by the end of December. It is stated that the Committee will recommend economies amounting in the North-West Provinces to thirteen lakhs, in the Central Provinces to two lakhs, and in Bombay to twenty-eight lakhs.

The Commission appointed to inquire into the question of the employment of Natives in the Civil Service will, it is said, assemble at Allahabad in January, and visit various administrative centres at Allahabad in January, and visit various administrative centres for the purpose of taking evidence. It is hoped that it will finish its work by the end of April.

It is understood that important reforms in the organisation of the Native Army are contemplated, including the linking of regiments in sets of three battalions, the introduction of the reserve system, and the shortening of the term of service for earning good conduct pay and pension.

The Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal, after some hesitation, has complied with the oft-repeated request of the Chamber of Com-merce that it might be allowed to elect a certain number of members to represent it on the Calcutta Port Commission. The necessary alteration in the law will be effected at once.

It is announced that Sir M. Grant Duff has changed his arrangements, and will now await Mr. Bourke's arrival at Madras.

TIBET.

DARJERLING, Oct. 17. A London telegram recently received in India states that one of the articles in the Convention with China is that England will not press the question of opening up trade with Tibet, as the obstacles prove to be insuperable. As it is difficult to understand what are the obstacles which could prove insuperable, I have taken advantage of a visit to Darjeeling to make some inquiries, with the following result: with the following result :-

It appears that when the news of Mr. Macaulay's projected It appears that when the news of Mr. Macaulay's projected mission reached Lhassa the subject was hotly discussed by the monks who form the dominant party. The older monks were all in favour of giving the mission a friendly reception, while the younger ones, who are all keen traders, took the opposite view because they feared the mission, by throwing open trade, would interfere with the monoply which they now enjoy. The Chinese Ampa, or Resident, at Lhassa is a notoriously venal, corrupt man, and the younger faction succeeded in bribing him to send a memorial to Pekin stating that the entire Tibetan record was opposed to the admittance of the mission. This represent people was opposed to the admittance of the mission. This representation was so totally contrary to the fact that the assistant Ampa resigned his office rather than be a party to it. But even after the memorial had been despatched the Ampa and the younger monks did not believe that the mission would be stopped, and they sent their ablest diplomatist to meet Mr. Macaulay at the frontier, with instructions if he could not induce the British envoy to withdraw, then to try the effect of compromise by consenting to his proceeding as far as Gyantze, an important trade centre about half way to Lhassa. Had the mission got only so far much would have been gained, and an important step would have been taken towards the opening of trade.

Just then orders came to abandon the mission, and the escort

Just then orders came to abandon the mission, and the escort which was encamped at Darjeeling to accompany it was sent back to the plains. Almost at the same moment the Indian Government, with singular ineptitude, ordered a mountain battery which had recently been stationed at Darjeeling to be sent to Burma. This fact, of course, has no connection with the abandoment of the mission, but the Tibetans supposed otherwise. They had believed, although incorrectly, that the battery was intended to accompany the mission, and the almost simultaneous withdrawal of escort and battery was attributed not to the true causes, but to fear on our part.

The result was immediately apparent. A considerable force of Tibetans, convinced that the British were in dread of their prowess, invaded the subsidiary State of Sikhim, built some forts on the territory, and occupied a road which the Indian Government constructed some years ago from Darjeeling to the Jelapla Pass. The Rajah of Sikhim has been called upon to turn them out, but he declares himself unable to do so. The invaders still remain, not more than three or four marches from Darjeeling, and remain, not more than three or four fiarches from Darjeeling, and are even said to have announced their intention of seizing this place. It is in the highest degree unlikely that they will attempt anything of the kind or commit themselves to any overt act of hostility. But what has already been done has distinctly tended to lower British prestige in Sikhim and Bhootan, and it is said that a marked change is observable in the tone and bearing of the

The tan traders who enter this district.

The remedy for this unfortunate state of affairs would appear to be to reconstitute the mission and despatch it at once, representing to the Chinese Government how completely it has been deceived by the Ampa. The time is propitious, as the Ampa's term of office is about to expire and his successor is already appointed. If the mission started early in December and got only as far as Gyantze, it might do much towards opening up trade. Without mentioning other articles of commerce, there is abundant evidence that the Tibetan provinces just beyond the frontier could afford an unlimited supply of long staple wool as well as fine shawl wool. At present that wool is hardly saleable, owing to the fact that the sheep are never washed. But if arrangements could be made for the protection of British subjects, by the establishment of Consuls at such places as Phari and Gyantze, there can be no doubt that the Calcutta merchants would send agents into the country, who would teach the people how to make their wool fit for the European market, and a large trade would

There is already a project on foot for establishing at Darjeeling a factory to work up Tibetan wool, and the growing importance of the trade may be gathered from the fact that even with the existing obstructions the value of the imports of wool and woollen etuffs from Tibet has risen in the last two years from Bs 43 000 to stuffs from Tibet has risen in the last two years from Rs.43,000 to Rs.88,000. In the present depression of trade it would seem worth while for English merchants to turn their attention towards this new and promising opening for commerce.

THE TOWER FURNISHING COMPANY WE have much pleasure in recommending to our readers, who, on their arrival in England, contemplate furnishing. The facilities this company offer are very great. You can have a house furnished in any style you like, and choose the goods from one hundred different manufacturers. The terms of payment can be spread over three years, and the charges for this accommodation are fair and moderate.

Tragery at Sealkote.—A soldier of the Carabiniers, named Stevenson, shot himself on the 15th inst. with his carbine while in a state of temporary insanity, by placing the muzzle of his weapon in his mouth, the bullet coming out at the crown of his head. The unfortunate man was very steady, having been a total abstainer for over twelve months, but unfortunately took to drinking about a week before committing the act. He shot himself in his barrack-room, where several men were lying down at the time.—Pimeer. the time.—Pioneer.

THE PACIFICATION OF BURMA.

(Rangoon Gazette). The measures most urgently needed for the rapid and complete pacification of the country are very different from a mere theatrical display of military force. Among Asiatics especially thea rical displays have their use, but they will do little good unless backed up by other and more important means. One of the most important of these is a more vigorous dealing with all the lawless individuals whom they do catch. We need far less squeamishness and nice conformity to legal quibbles in punishing the men who join the dacoits. In perfectly peaceful and quiet times it is all very well to give criminals the benefit of any doubt, but when we are putting down anarchy we cannot afford to do this. We must act rather on the principle that the suspicious character, or the man whom we find in bad company, is much better in jail or at the Andamans out of mischief. Some years ago, when there had been an outbreak of some kind in one of the jails in Burma, and in suppressing it some prisoners had been shot, some civilians expressed regret that men who were possibly only guilty of minor offences, should find their incarceration in jail end in the extreme penalty of death. An old military officer of many years, varied experience in Burma at once replied that if men got into jail they must take their chance. Had we acted more in this spirit and made all the men who joined the dacoits take their chance without much sitting of whether they joined willingly or not, probably far fewer would have joined. There are cases where severity and even apparent harshness are the truest kindness; and we believe, that some approach to martial law would have done much to prevent any necessity for bringing down more troops now to scour the

Another reform urgently needed is to abandon altogether all race considerations in the selection of men employed in Government service. Where an examination affords any adequate test of a man's fitness for a certain post, the competition should be open on even terms to men of every race and creed, and the best man should win. Where other qualifications than scholarship are the chief considerations, other means than examinations must be the best men available, not to find posts for a certain race. In the Police and in the Excise, the peculiar unfitness of the average Burmans of to-day is admitted on all sides, and most people would add that they are equally unfit for employment in the sub-ordinate magistracy. Still there are exceptions. Some Burmans have done most excellent work, and we should deprecate the have done most excellent work, and we should deprecate the barring of any race, as much as we deprecate the favouring of any. The State's duty to the taxpayers is simply to find the best men it can for all the branches of the public service. The bulk of the taxpayers are Burmese, and it is really far more important to them, individually, to have the country effectively administered, than to have a millionth chance of one day having a relative favoured in the competition for a petty post under Government. Wealthy Burmans do not employ their own countrymen in their own service if they can get foreigners to do better work. then, should the nation employ inefficient Burmese lads if better men are to be had on the same terms?

A third, and very important means towards the final pacification of the country, is the pushing on the work of railway construction. The whole history of both Upper and Lower Burma during the last few months shows that the more inaccessible a district is Wherever the more rapidly does disorder come to a head there. rivers and railways have brought the people into intimate connection with Rangoon there has been scarcely any outbreak of disorder, and in the cases where some local rising has occurred, it has been easily put down. In Upper Burma, too, it is the parta which have long been easily accessible by the river steamers that are now comparatively settled. The hitherto practically unknown Chindwin District is certain to advance with rapid strides in civilisation, peace, and prosperity now that the Flotilla statemers have found their way up there. But nothing is to be expected from that great and important section of the country lying to the immediate North of Tounghoo, until a railway runs through it. immediate North of Tounghoo, until a railway runs through it. There are other parts too, remote from any navigable river where railways are urgen.ly wanted. So long as British Burma was only a strip of sea-coast, the question of railways was mainly important in its commercial aspect. Now its importance from that point of view is enormously increased, and it has, besides, assumed a political importance, which was almost wholly wanting before. Our new province must be opened out to the sea by railways, and must be welded into a component part of our Indian Empire by lines joining the main Indian lines. That once done, the people will be benefited by an enormous increase of trade; the revenue will grow by leaps and bounds; and last, but not least, disorder like the present, bred of ignorance and inaccessibility.

A LITTLE INTERNATIONAL DIFFICULTY.

disorder like the present, bred of ignorance and inaccessibility, will cease to be possible.

(Times of India.)
It is perhaps due to English hospitality to remember that the commander of a foreign man-of-war in our harbour is precluded from replying to any comments on his conduct that may chance to appear in the local newspapers. The captain of the German gun-boat Möewe has been taken to task because he would not allow Dr. Blaney and an English jury hastily gathered together in the harbour to hold an inquest on the body of one of his officers; and as the captain cannot defend himself it is only fair to give the true version of the case. The Moewe came to Bombay to go into dock, and the naval authorities here placed the hulk Auckland. at the disposal of the captain. He moved his officers and his crew into her, and she was for the time being a German vessel, just as when she is lent (as she often is) to any of our own naval commanders she becomes for the time being part and parcel of the British Navy. This is essential, of course, for the maintenance of discipline. The men from the Möewe were subject to German naval law while on board the hulk, just as the men from our ships have always been subject, while on board her, to the laws and discipline of the British Navy. For the time being the hulk merely takes the place of the ship in dock, the captain's authority remaining as before. While the German crew were on board the hulk Auckland their medical officer unfortunately died and Mr. Blency warred by the police came on board with a jury collected from the ships in the harbour to hold an inquest. The German commander said he would be extremely obliged if Dr. Blaney would cause a post mortem examination to be made and a certificate of death to be granted, but declined to allow an inquest in the English legal form to be held on the body of a German officer lying under the German flag. In declining to allow the body to be buried without an inquest, Dr. Blaney, or whoever the responsible official may be, was distinctly in the wrong. There was, of course, no suspicion of foul play. But it is the chief business of a coroner to examine this question of foul play, and, if necessary, to cause the arrest of suspected persons, according to the English law. An English coroner could not have caused the arrest of any of the German crew, and the inquest, therefore, unnecessary and uncalled for. Dr. Blancy refused to give a certificate of death without an inquest, and without a certificate of death the body could not be buried. The funeral had to be postponed until leave could be obtained from the higher authorities. Owing to the accident, it is said of the office of Advocate-General being vacant, the authorities at the Secretariat were unable to act. A telegram was despatched to Poona, and a reply was received from H.E. the Governor, ordering that the body should be given proper burial at once. As soon as possible next morning the acting Por: Medical Officer, Dr. Street, waited on the hulk, held a short post mortem examination. tion, and gave a certificate of death; and then, escorted by a large party from the Möeve, and by all the officers of the Indian Marine, the doctor's body was borne to its last resting place in the Sewree Cemetery, where all fitting preparations had been made the day before. It is to be regretted that there is no authority resident before. It is to be regretted that there is no authority resident in Bombay by whom any question of this kind could be imme-diately settled. The Chief Justice and the Commissioner of Police are both responsible men, and one or other of them should be empowered to represent the Government on any future emergency of the kind. Dr. Blaney is a man of many parts, but it can scarcely be one of the coroner's functions to both raise and determine a point of international law.

THE ANGLO-INDIAN'S HOME CHARGES. (Bombay Gazette.)

Some months ago we pointed out that the influences at work which have led to the depreciation of the rupee have had a compensatory influence by diminishing prices in England. We do not think that this compensating action is so strong as to make the Indian rupee as valuable in purchasing European goods as it was a few years ago. But still it is some comfort to find that at any rate its fall in power of purchasing European commodities is not to be measured by its fall in value with reference to gold. Our rupees buy fewer sovereigns, but our sovereigns can now buy in England rather more of the luxuries and necessaries of life than they used to buy. Mr. O'Connor in his late essay remarked that the average price of wheat in the London market in 1885 is the average price of wheat in the London market in 1885 is nearly 32 per cent. less than the average price of 1870, and that prices in England have fallen 30 per cent. all round. Anyone may confirm this comforting fact for himself by referring to the Tabular Statements of the Comparative Prices of commodities given monthly by the Economist. The substantial character and the rapidity of the fall in prices of the various items that make up the cost of living in January 7th, 1883, and August 7th, 1886. During this interval of three years and a half prime small beef has fallen from 5s. 4d. to 3s. 9d., prime mutton from 6s. 8d. to 5s. per 8lbs., flour from £1 13s. to £1 5s. 6d. per 280 lbs., potatoes from £6 to £5 per ton, rice from 6s.  $10\frac{1}{2}$ d. to 6s. 3d. per cwt. With the exception of a slight increase in the price of oats none of the nine items under which the Food Products are classified have risen in price. under which the Food Products are classified have risen in price. Turning to the price of materials for textile manufactures we find that flax has risen in price, wool has remained stationary, and cotton, silk, hemp, and jute have fallen. Among the commodities for drinking, lighting, and other purposes only tea and olive oil have become dearer, but sugar has fallen from 12s. and 18s. 3d. to 9s. and 11s. 9d. per ewt., coffee from £3 4s. to £3 2s. 6d., petroleum from 7d. to 5½d. per gallon, and tallow from £2. 3s. 6d. to £1 4s. 9d. Iron, coal, copper, tin, lead, and saltpetre, that is, all the minerals mentioned in the \*\*Economist's tables, have fallen in value. The decrease in the price of coals happens to be small, but the various kinds of iron specified have fallen from £2 9s. 5d., £6, and £5 7s. 6d. to £1 19s., £4 12s. 6d., and £3 12s. 6d. respectively. The importance of the fall in iron in diminishing the cost of life will be evident to any one who considers the immense importance of this metal as the material out of which manufacturing machinery and workmen's tools are mainly constructed. The cheapening of iron and of the necessaries of life must lower the wages of the carpenter, the plumber, and the other artisans who have been called in periodically for repairs. It must be remembered that the commodities we have considered are not instances selected to prove the existence of a fall of prices or any other theory. They are simply those articles which happen to be included in lists intended to show in a convenient form by a few typical examples the rise and fall of prices month by month. The same fall that has taken place among the important commodities that happen to be specified is sure to prevail generally among all commodities. Thus it is perfectly certain that the plain facts we have quoted should have their effect in reducing the butcher's, baker's, milliner's, and tailor's bills of families living in England. It is very natural that we should find it difficult to believe this fall in prices, though we very easily recognise on the other side the loss suffered by a depreciated rupee. The loss is brought home to us in a concentrated form when we find that a rupee which not long ago was worth nearly 1s. 8d. is now not worth 1s. 5d., while the compensating gain brought about by the appreciation of gold is divided among the various items of the bills we have to pay, subtracting fro question we must not consult the casual and uncertain utterances of our memory, but go to statistics.

It is not without a certain amount of hesitation that we bring forward these consolatory facts. There are some people who are so fond of having a grievance that they resent as an injury any attempt to deprive them of their right to grumble. To such we would reply, that after all, although it is perfectly certain that the general fall of prices mitigates the loss suffered by the depreciation of the rupee, it is probable that the compensation is only partial. The present low state of the rupee may be due as much to depreciation of silver as to appreciation of gold. If that is the case, then the power of silver to purchase other commodities than gold is actually diminished, and the most rapid adjustment of prices would not make the rupee buy what it used to buy. But even if, as many think, it is not silver that has depreciated, but gold that has risen in value, even then prices will only be moving very slowly to adjust themselves to the increased value of gold, and never quite manage to catch it up. Sellers make a hard fight before they consent to lower prices, although they eventually must do so if the value of money increases. There is no doubt that the custodians of Anglo-Indian children, who consented to take charge of them at a certain rate several years ago, will be inclined to refuse to abate their charges, however many statistics we bring to bear upon them showing that their butcher's and baker's bills and house-rent must have become smaller. However, in the end the fall in the prices of commodities must make itself felt in all such transactions, and alleviate to a certain extent the burden of the Anglo-Indian paterfamilias who has to remit home a large portion of his taxed income of depreciated rupees. From this contingency let him get such small comfort as he can.

(Anglo-Indian.)

The absence of reconstructive effort from the phalanx of destructive energy which has, to some extent necessarily, been applied by Englishmen in India to the evils which they have encountered, or thought that they have encountered, must always remain as an evidence of the defective intelligence which has been brought to the task. It will be impossible for English historians of the British Indian Empire to maintain that the whole duty of Anglo-Indian administrators has consisted in drawing salaries from the public revenues, and leaving the country as soon as the process was completed. And almost any other view of that duty must involve considerations of insight in releasing present difficulty, and of foresight in attempting to meet it—the systematic neglect of which must reduce persons guilty of such neglect to the position of men who have failed in life by missing its highest purpose. For some years past, as education has loosened the hold of ancient standards of duty on the Native conscience, and given a new license to the Native mind, and indigenous institutions have bent under the pressure of adverse winds, it must have become obvious to the least thoughtful that the one escape from hopeless confusion, if not from great disaster, in the not very remote future, has lain in resort to reconstructive effort. Only thus could minds shaken from their old anchorage gather up the fragments of old institutions, and devise new surroundings for them out of the old materials, under the influence of new thought and new feeling. Native reformers must do this for themselves in time, if English reformers will not do it for them, or lead them on the way, before. As so much depends on the character and direction of all Native effort of depends on the character and direction of all Native effort of this kind, every consideration of self-preservation seems to conspire with every consideration of the duties which men owe to their neighbours, to urge Anglo-Indians of every degree to attempt to lead Native aspiration and Native energy into channels which, while making them full of promise, will carry them away from every source of danger. No brighter promise ever dawned on a country than that which has arisen on India. None was ever clouded with sadder menaces. In its efforts to satisfy the country the Government has while looking after the rured was ever clouded with sadder menaces. In its efforts to satisfy the country, the Government has, while looking after the rural masses in a perfunctory manner, devoted its attention specially to town populations. To Native gentlemen of good birth and social position in the interior it is a cause of great bitterness and severe disappointment that many of the Natives who have been raised to any eminence by the Government have been members of town families, often of obscure origin, who know little of either the real gentry of the country or of the rural masses. The institutions which have helped to gain notoriety for such men have been as false and as artificial as the luck which has served them so well—has been unhealthy. The Government of India cannot too so well—has been unhealthy. The Government of India cannot too plainly realise, or realise too early—for every year's delay aggravates the evil—that the greatest good of the greatest number must be its first object, and that object must be honestly and intelligently pursued until it is secured. It is of far greater importance, to the Government itself as well as to the country, that the rural masses should have the best officials for whom the country can afford to pay, and the best Government it can get, than that the ambitions raised in the minds of a few Natives—whether scores, or hundreds or thousands it meters little—should be gratified. or hundreds, or thousands, it matters little—should be gratified. The duty of allowing Natives of India to take a fair share in the services of their country is one that must be faced and fulfilled; but no one in his senses will maintain that this duty dwarfs the but no one in his senses will maintain that this duty dwarfs the other, and higher, and greater, one of carefully studying the interests of the rural masses, the "teeming millions" of familiar oratorical metaphors. The country will never be free or fit for freedom until primary education has at least reached the masses; and, while teaching them the forms of self-government, instructed them also in its historical uses. It has been suggested before in these columns that our Native fellow-subjects would probably be satisfied with a fixed proportion of oppointments in the public service; and no more powerful weapon for future and further improvement could be devised than that furnished by the co-operation of educated Native gentlemen. At furnished by the co-operation of educated Native gentlemen. any rate, foundations must be laid at the bottom, and not at the summit, of any structure; and it is by active decentralisation that this can best be accomplished. To catch up the impulses of life as they are found rising in the rural masses, and mould them into natural types of strength, and help them to express themselves in institutions in which they shall rejoice while they exhibit their real strength—this is to help a people to live. To foster artificial imitations of foreign institutions in half Anglicised towns is not merely not to effect any reform, but it is to experiment with accidental conditions lying outside the real life of the people. It is neither difficult to discover, nor hard to enforce the real conditions of Indian reconstruction. The Calcutta Missionary real conditions of Indian reconstruction. The Calcutta Missionary Conference, which is one of the most comprehensive religious societies in India, embracing as it does ordained ministers and missionaries of every Protestant denomination in the country—including the Church of England, the Churches of Scotland, Baptists, Methodists, and Congregationalists; and thus representing all Protestant Christianity in India—may be expected, when it speaks on questions of social and religious interest to speak both with experience and with weight religious interest, to speak both with experience and with weight. The Conference has for some months past, as we have before informed our readers, been considering, with the careful deliberation which the subject demands, the whole question of the social evil in all its varied aspect—whether with the view of moving the Lorislature or with the object of enlisting public sympathy. the Legislature or with the object of enlisting public sympathy and help, must, we imagine, be finally determined by its own members, according to the results of their inquiries. Nothing, however, is more certain than that great moral maladies, which have struck their roots deep into the structure of any social fabric, cannot be successfully dealt with by any spasmodic sensation, and least of all by sensation inspired by ignorance. The meeting held lately in the Town. Hall has proved so unsatisfactory in one very important respect—namely, in having mis-represented Christian Calcutta as being desirous of reintroducing legislation which the Christian conscience of England and India have unmistakably condemned—that it is satisfactory to know that the Missionary Conference contemplates some suitable official action which may be depended on to remove all unfortunate misconceptions of this kind.

INFANT-MARRIAGE.

(Pioneer.)

In discussing the antidote to infant marriage let us once for all put aside all idea that it may be eradicated by any imperial ukase. Our reformers, however they may begin by denouncing the rule of the foreigner, eventually appeal to him for help. Directly it becomes necessary to substitute action for words they stand aside and call upon their rules to continue what they foolishly think they have begun. If they turn to the example of the West, they will learn that those nations are the most advanced who trust least to ther Government and most to them selves. We do not mean to imply that the Idinan Government is weak, and therefore unworthy of the trust which the reformer would place in it. The Government is one of the strongest in the world, for it stands in the unique position of a despotism backed by all the force of a constitutional country. Yet if the Government were twice as powerful, a decree abolishing infant marriages would have very little effect upon the people. Let, for instance, the age for contracting marriages be fixed at fifteen years. Who is to prevent the parents from promising their children to each other before that age is attained? "But this promise would not be supported by the law, and therefore could not be enforced should either of the contracting parties desire to cry off." The answer comes readily enough; the caste will enforce the promise if the law does not, and the caste penalties are more dreaded than the legal. Again, suppose the Government were to order that cohabitation was unlawful before the age when man and woman had both arrived at some maturity in bodily formation, the decree would be a dead letter if the people were not a consenting party thereto—unless Government could at the same time order that marriage contracts be not made before that time, which we have just shown to be impossible. This custom is not like sati, which could be stamped out by the strong heel of the law. It is universal, concerns everybody, and is supported by the general consent; and only with the general consent can it be put down? We ourselves in civilised England find the shackles of custom weight us heavily, and yet we dare not throw them off. What must the power of that custom be the Native tendency to convert gold into jewellery, and thus to hoard it and render it unproductive; but the comfort is somewhat mitigated when we find the advantages of the system overstated, and its disadvantages, or the advantages of the opposite course, of employing the gold in useful and productive works, understated. Thus, one of the arguments for the making of jewellery is that "it can always be pledged or disposed of. The market for its sale is never closed and never depressed." What a very dangerous fallacy this is appeared with most painful distinctness during the last great famine. So universal was the want of food that often the only purchasers that could be found for jewels were the extortionate and iron-hearted money lenders or grain merchants. Not only did jewellery fall in value in common with coin—for the precious metals in every form lost very much of their purchasing power—but in relation to money itself jewels sank in many places to less than a fourth of their value, and in some to an eighth of the same. Gold—to say nothing of silver—in the form of jewellery was very little in demard. The principal wearers of them, women and children, were dying off; so that much of the jewellery became useless for purposes of wear. And there was no marrying or giving in marriage; there were no festivities. In the years of the country's direst need gold as jewellery sank to between a fourth and an eighth of its usual value, as represented in coined silver, because jewellery was not current; it was not a medium of exchange. And when it is remembered that even money fell to between one-fourth and one-sixth of its usual value as compared with food grains, it will be seen that the value of jewellery, as compared with that of food grains, fell to between one-sixteenth and one forty-eighth part of its usual value. If in ordinary times a ryot in distress, by selling a small ornament, could procure forty-eight measures of millet and feed his family for a fortnight, during the great famine, it might in some large vil women were often too weak to walk the five, ten, or fifteen miles that would bring them to the slightly better market for their jewels. Furthermore, the great famine exposed the dimensions of another evil connected with jewellery, which is always known to exist, but seldom known to its full extent; and that is the frightful, indeed the cruel, dishonesty of many Native jewellers. They debase the gold given them, and make up the jewels of wretched metal; and where the jewels are supposed to be more or less massive, as in armlets, anklets, beads, &c., they use but a very thin sheet of the precious metal to cover a large quantity of lead, iron, or even lac. Ignorant rustics, therefore, who flatter themselves that they are hoarding twenty rupees by making up jewellery, often really receive from the jeweller only five rupees' value, sometimes much less than that. During a great famine, when ryots do not buy from one another, they bring their jewels to the traders; and these knowing ones expose the cheat; and the poor ryot finds himself utterly bankrupt. This is why Native jewellers in the interior charge so very little as they do for their work. Indeed, in towns, workmanship appears to cost between four and five times what it does in the country; but when the fraud in the country is considered, town workmanship is often cheaper. This accounts too for the very extensive use of European coins as jewels. It is not simply that the coins are beautiful specimens of workmanship; for the gold could be put into better form for ornamental purposes; nor is it that the coins could be used again as circulating medium; for they are sufficiently affected by the addition of loops, &c., to prevent that; but it is felt that, if the gold were put into the melting pot, the chances are very greatly against its coming out purified, or anything like as pure as when it was put in. To leave the sovereigns, half-sovereigns, and French gold coins unaltered, therefore, is to leave proof, to possible purchasers, of the standard of purity in the

If then it can be urged in favour of converting money into jewellery that it escapes income-tax and can be re-converted into money, on the other hand it may be urged that it is unproductive and yields no profit; that it seldom fetches in ordinary time of need more than the value of the metal, so that the value of the workmanship is lost; that the metal is often of less real value than is supposed; and that in famine time it is immensely depresided.

India is glutted with jewellery; and yet India presents so mean an appearance to strangers that they believe it poor. In other countries the wealth that here runs into jewellery would be employed to cherish life and improve morality. The country at large has most urgent need of better dwelling-houses. The want of these is the cause of much sickness, mortality and immorality. The same, though to a less extent, may be said of better clothing. It would considerably improve health as well as comfort, if better furniture—in many cases we should say, some furniture—were used. A very large amount indeed of sickness is caused by sitting and sleeping on thin mats spread on damp floors by going barefoot, and by deficient protection of the skin from chills. But barefooted, half-naked or nearly unclad dwellers in damp huts, destitute of any furniture but a few pots and mats, may be found wearing jewels of gold! And the right employment of the precious metal would not only give them better comforts, but afford employment to many poor. But to pass to higher matters, the hoarded wealth of rich Natives might immensely stimulate production, and the arts and manufactures; and above all, stave off famine, and improve the trade of this country with the world and indeed of the world itself. For what a derangement of the trade of the whole world it is that India withdraws from circulation and hoards away more than one quarter of the world's production of gold. Last year the world's production of gold was only about seventeen millions-worth; and of this India absorbed and withdrew from use between four and five millions! Must there be an irruption of barbarians—say a Ruesian invasion—to break up and scatter these useless, wicked hoards?

THE DUKE OF CONNAUGHT. (Times of India.)

The second visit of his Royal Highness the Duke of Connaught to India is in its way a unique event. Other members of the Royal Family have passed through India, but as travellers only, and they have never returned. The Duke, however, comes in the ordinary course of his profession as a soldier. He found his first sojourn here pleasant and healthy, and his second visit should go far in removing the popular prejudices at home as to the dangers and perils of our Indian climate. This in itself will be a good thing. But apart from this, the popularity the Duke has already achieved in Anglo-Indian society shows how desirable it is that India should be selected from time to time for the residence of some member of the Royal Family. His genial manners and his frank manly countenance made him popular wherever he went, and the presence of the Duchess will be, as before, an important element in his popularity. "I am especially pleased," said the Duke in the speech he delivered on the 21st of November 1883, "that I am accompanied to India by the Duchess of Connaught, who is the first princess of the Royal Family of England who has ever visited your shores." This pleasure was to a large extent shared by the public, English and Native. Her Royal Highness returns to this country, like so many ladies of lesser rank, to assist her husband in his duties, and we trust that the stock of English health she brings with her will serve her as admirably as the last occasion. The Duke is 36 years of age, and his wife, who is of course the grand-niece of the Emperor of Germany, is some ten years younger. This is, in either case, the prime of life for Indian service, and it is considered likely that their Royal Highnesses will remain here for some time, though probably with short vacations, until having held the command of the Bombay Army, the Duke qualifies himself for the command of the Indian Army, so as to be ready in due course, as the years roll on, to succeed the Duke of Cambridge in the command of the Army at home as Field Marshal Commanding-in-Chief. If we may hazard a guess, we should imagine that the Duke is delighted return to Indian service. He was withdrawn, as it was always understood, at the express wish of Her Majesty the Queen at a time when the Penjdeh affair seemed likely to plunge the country into war, and when our dockyards and arsenals were busily occupied night and day in warlike preparations. He is believed to have resisted the Royal commands as long as he was able to do so, and most of our readers will remember how eagerly his movements were watched by those who wished to read the future. His plans underwent an almost daily change. Whenever it was rumoured that the Duke would stay the public interpreted this to mean that war was inevitable. When it was rumoured that he was going it seemed that all the difficulties had been safely tided over. When he went at last, most military men said that war was impossible, and events, in the course of a week or two, showed that they were right. It is an open secret that the Prince's friends expected him to return to India as Commander-in-Chief of the Bombay Army, and it was for this reason alone that General Hardinge obtained an unusual extension of service. However, there were some questions of seniori

BENGAL.

At the close of the meeting of the Bengal Legislative Council Sir Rivers Thompson left for Darjeeling.

THE British Indian Association have addressed a long letter to Government on the ghee question, urging the extension of the Bill to the whole Province.

A NATIVE paper says that a rich and high-minded Native lady, Srimutty Anna Kali Dabee, widow of the late Rai Anoda Prosaud, Rai Bahadoor, of Berhampore, has given a princely donation of Rs. 15,000 for the support of the Berhampore College.

It is reported that a well-known Native gentleman of Calcutta, connected with the Vernacular Press, has gone to Assam in the assumed garb of, and duly registered, as a cooly, "in order to have personal experience of the persecutions and oppressions to which the coolies are generally subjected."

DURING the month of July 1,207 males and 564 females emigrated from Calcutta. Of the total number 1,237 went to Demerara and 534 to Trinidad. The bulk of the emigrants came from Behar, the North-West Provinces and Oudh. With regard to caste, 235 were Brahmins of high caste, 325 Hindoo agriculturists, 433 Hindoo artisans, and 524 Hindoos of low caste. The remaining 254 emigrants were Mahomedans.

THE Calcutta Municipal Commissioners had a field day on the 23rd ult. to consider the question whether they should grant the newly-appointed health officer of the city, Dr. Simpson, his passage-money from England. In the agreement made with Dr. Simpson no reference was made to the payment of passage-money, and the Town Council, therefore, passed a resolution declining to pay the same. The Commissioners, after a long discussion adopted a resolution by twenty-three to five, deciding to rescind the Town Council's motion and pay Dr. Simpson the amount he had paid for his passage.

WRITING of the state of public feeling in the districts of Burdwan and Hooghly, where a large number of the inhabitants have received an English education, the Commissioner draws special attention to the extent to which the educated Natives are learning to combine for purposes of agitation. Such combinations are now managed by professional agitators and wire-pullers, but they may yet become of political importance. During the past year the local associations took an active part in the discussions of most of the public questions of the day. The Bengal Tenancy Act excited the interest alike of zemindar and ryot, and in parts of Burdwan, Midnapore, and Hooghly the tenants withheld payment of their rents, owing to a misunderstanding regarding the particulars which should be entered in the receipts. Local self-government attracted attention only among the educated classes, but the Income Tax Act caused general dissatisfaction.

MADRAS.

SOME of the European, Eurasian and Native officials of Bangalore intend starting a bank, with a capital of two lakhs of rupees, and to this end a prospectus and a share list are being circulated.

At a meeting of the Madras Fair Committee on the 14th ult. the following motion was agreed to:—That, in the opinion of this meeting, it is desirable that the Jubilee of Her Most Gracious Majesty Queen Victoria be celebrated throughout the Presidency of Madras on Saturday, the 1st January, 1887, being the tenth anniversary of the assumption by Her Majesty of the title of "Empress of India." An influential committee was appointed to give effect to the resolution.

A TERRIBLE tragedy is reported to have occurred, by a Madras paper, at Bellary on the 23rd ult. Two soldiers of the Rifle Brigade decamped from their regiment before the departure of the right wing for Madras en route to Burma, and attacked a Native near the telegraph office and murdered him in cold blood, at 9 P.M., and wounded another, who courageously endeavoured to render assistance to the unfortunate man. One of the supposed murderers was caught at 11 P.M., and the other later on. The authorities are investigating the matter.

A NOTIFICATION, published in the Gazette of India, gives a list of tombs or monuments in a ruinous condition at St. Stephen's Church, Ootacamund, and intimates that these tombs "will be made level with the ground if any relatives or friends of the deceased do not undertake to restore them within three months from the date of this advertisment." As the notification in published in such a manner that there is little possibility of those interested seeing it, the authorities are not likely to be interfered with in carrying out their levelling operations.

A BANGALORE paper points to the fact that the coffee crop in Coorg during the past season was a large one, being valued at little less than forty lakes of rupees. "With good prices in England, and improved methods of cultivation, the industry is recovering rapidly from the period of depression through which it has recently passed, and there is now every prospect of its proving thoroughly remunerative. . . With the reviving prosperity of the district now evident, we think this is no inopportune moment for reviving the question of railway communication, and specially so, because the great advantages of the railway have of late years been clearly demonstrated and are now so fully recognised by the Government. Few districts have stronger claims to being afforded facilities of this kind than Coorg."

BOMBAY.

The Duke and Duchess at Poona.—At Poona, on Sept. 30, their Royal Highnesses the Duke and Duchess of Connaught fulfilled their first public engagement since returning to India, by presiding over the prize distribution to the students of the Female Training College and Primary Girls' Schools of Poona, The girls sang a special Marathi welcome to the Duchess, who afterwards gave away the awards. H.E. the Governor, in thanking the Duchess, assured Her Highness that she was specially welcomed back by the women of India, as these knew that the august sanction given recently by the Queen-Empress to the Female Medical Aid movement was largely attributable to the influence exercised by her Highness in representing to Her Majesty the needs of Indian women. The Duchess, by acquiring the Native languages, had been able to communicate with the Indian ladies, and learn from their own lips what they wanted of their Sovereign. Military education had trught Germany that organisation was only made perfect through the complete mastery of detail, and that through education was eliminated the risk which attended on ceaseless application of thought to a solution of complex problems of modern society. This lesson he commended to the students of the institution, and through them to the women of India. The Duke, in replying for the Duchess, said that she, indeed, took a deep interest in all matters connected with women in India. It was a great gratification to the Queen and to the Duchess to think that efforts had already been made to give the latter the necessary assistance. They hoped the result might be crowned with success.

The Duke and Duchess at the Horse Show.—After leaving the Soldiers' Institute for the Horse Show an alarming accident occurred to the carriage containing Major and Mrs. Hunay, who were in attendance on their Royal Highnesses the Duke and Duchess of Connaught, which was following H.E. the Governor's conveyance, when the horses bolted with fright, and dashed into one of the three steam rollers standing beside the road. Major Hannay and his wife jumped out unburt, just before the collision, which smashed the carriage. The terrified pair of horses were secured with great difficulty. H.E. the Governor and the Duke of Connaught alighted, and the whole procession halted until Major and Mrs. Hannay rejoined the party. The accident having detained the calvacade, their Royal Highnesses the Duke and Duchess arrived late at the Horse Show. The jumping and driving competitions were decided in their presence, the Maharaja of Jodhpure's teams carrying all before them. The Duchess distributed a few prizes, when darkness prevented any further ceremony.

A MEETING of the National Association for Supplying Medical Female Aid to the Women of India was held at the Viceregal Lodge, Simla, on Wednesday afternoon under the presidency of Lady Dufferin.

ENGLAND IN THE EAST.

The Government was questioned very recently by Sir Henry Tyler as to whether the Quetta Railway is now open for traffic, and also about the condition of railways in the direction of Candahar. The answer given by Sir J. E. Gorst, as reported, is on the whole a satisfactory one. It is especially satisfactory when we consider that, not so very long ago, the whole question of the Quetta Railway and of intercommunication on the North-West frontier was involved in confusion and contradiction. But frontier was involved in confusion and contradiction. But happily, we have got past the stage when this vital problem can any longer, with impunity, be made a football of for the gratification of party rivalry. Even the tearers up of the Quetta Railway are now, in so far as an acknowledgment of its worth is concerned, at one with the most zealous promoters of the scheme. Current events speak volumes for the far-seeing policy of the deceased Earl of Beaconsfield, as regards the interests of Great deceased Earl of Beaconsfield, as regards the interests of Great Britain in the region of Afghanistan. According to the official reply, the railway through the Bolan Pass was completed to Quetta on the 26th of July, while that by the Hurnai route is still under construction. The assurance that preliminary surveys have been made for the building of a line beyond Quetta in the direction of Candahar is so far highly satisfactory.

But the present state of international politics does not warrant the authorities in standing still after making their preliminary surveys; nor is it to be believed that they themselves take a different view of the situation. The Bulgarian episode, as we have repeatedly endeavoured to show, is but one link in a chain of incidents, about the forging of which no Power on earth ought to be more concerned than Great Britain. The bulk of our countrymen have not yet realised how inseparably linked together to be more concerned than Great Britain. The bulk of our countrymen have not yet realised how inseparably linked together is England's commercial prosperity and England's prestige among the nations; and comparatively few of them seem to perceive the danger that threatens the welfare of Great Britain on the North-West frontier of India and in the projected changes in South-Eastern Europe. The man whose political meditations have carried him beyond the brink of a partizan platform cannot consider the contemporary action of Russia in Bulgaria, in Roumania, in the Caucasus, in Central Asia, in Corpa, and in the Pacific, without perceiving that the day cannot be far distant when England will be compelled either to give up much of what she calls her own, or make a determined stand much of what she calls her own, or make a determined stand in the defence of it. Already established in Batoum, Russia, cnce mistress of Bulgaria, will not find it a difficult task to absorb the whole Eastern Coast of the Black Sea, seize the Asiatic side of the Bosphorus, and strike a blow at Armenia. Even those who, in their purblind partisanship, have been wont to make a laughing-stock of "British interests," and take delight in finding their own country in the wrong, cannot shut their eyes to the rapidity with which Russia is consolidating her annexations in Central Asia, developing her means of com-munication, and pushing forward her outworks. What Merv was to Khiva, Herat will be to Penjdeh; and the inhabitants of Afghan-Turkestan will be compelled to join those of the Central Oasis as Russian subjects, unless England takes action to prevent The existing situation in that region has been described by no one more clearly and effectively than by Mr. W. P. Andrew in a letter that appeared in the Times, some time ago, above his signature. We gladly refer to that communication, and could well wish to see it reprinted and circulated broadcast for the instruction of the public. Mr. Andrew has an unequalled knowledge of the subject, gathered up from the study and experience of a great many years. Like many others, we have been indebted to him for the vigous of his exposition and the extent of his information. "The future policy of England," says Mr. Andrew, "is to rely upon her own vigilance and valour, to complete and perfect the upon her own vigilance and valour, to complete and perfect the railways to the Khyber and Bolan passes, carrying on the latter line to Quetta, and eventually to Candahar, where we ought to occupy a position in strength, able to repel any movement towards the Bolan, and to assail in flank and rear any force advancing towards the Khyber." To quote further:—"Let us therefore without delay fix the line that Russia is not to pass, as the prestige of our invincibility and our power of dominion would be seriously affected by the invasion by the Muscovite of the dominions of our ally, Abdurrahman Khan, whose territory we have pledged the honour of England to hold inviolate." That is the situation, and that is the only safe policy for England to is the situation, and that is the only safe policy for England to pursue. But there is another railway urgently demanding reconsideration in face of the present attitude of Russia. That is the projected Indo-European Railway along the valley of the Euphrates and the shores of the Persian Gulf. Mr. W. P. Andrew has pleaded long and ably for the construction of this line; and we shall take care to have an early opportunity to lay before our readers the character of the propose I undertaking, and the reasons for holding that further delay in its construction is a danger to Great Britain .- Newcastle Daily Chronicle.

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

THE BUCHHOLZ FAMILY.

The immense popularity which the Sketches of Berlin, com-prised under the title of "The Buchholz Family," have attained in Germany (the book having reached its 50th edition in the short space of two years) has naturally led to the appearance of the work in English. It is not, of course, to be anticipated that the translation will achieve the success of the original, well—remarkably well—as the scenes have been reproduced and clad in an idiomatic as well as an accurate garb. Somewhat of the piquancy of the author must of necessity be lost to the reader who, moreover, as a stranger to the inner life of Berlin, will, in many instances, fail to detect the humour of a passage which appeals to local knowledge or a national peculiarity. With all this, however, the work will, we venture to think, be read with the deepest interest; the traits of human nature are so unartificial, so simple, so quaint, and withal so true, that every page reveals a master's hand, every line proclaims a thoughtful

The Buchholz Family, which belongs to the shopkeeping class, consists of the husband, the wife, and two daughters; and the sketches comprise the sayings and doings of this little knot of beings as they jog the road of life in the great metropolis of the Prussian Empire. Since the articles are penned in the name of the mother, Frau Buchholz, let us adopt the continental rule of the mother, Frau Buchholz, let us adopt the continental rule of etiquette, place aux dames, and glance at the 'matron in question, "an unpretending woman," who disdains an idea that "writing is her strong point." The first scene she depicts is amusing to a degree. The children of the family are indulging in a little nursery gaiety in the shape of a "doll's theatre." When the play commences and all the guests were assembled, picture the virtuous mother's horror when one of the female dalls getting issues at the attentions mid to another doll are dolls, getting jealous at the attentions paid to another doll, exdolls, getting jealous at the attentions paid to another doll, exclaimed, in wrathful indignation, "Fancy! Rosalie, that frivolous creature is now making love to my sergeant." "This is a pretty beginning," said Frau Heinrich to Frau Buchholz, in a whisper. The latter retorted that it was no use "weighing every word in a goldsmith's scales." So the clamour of tongues waxed warm between the rival "fraus" till the second act began, and an infant was exposed. Rosalie finds it, and a man doll tells her to her face that it is hers! This was a little too "too-too." Frau Heinrich, taking her children by the hand, rushed away, exclaiming the while that the descendants of one who bore the decoration of the "Red Eagle" (albeit of the fourth grade only, as Frau Buchholz took particular care to inform the company) as Frau Buchholz took particular care to inform the company) could not be allowed to witness such shameful scenes. The whole assembly then broke up in tumultuous confusion, and thus ended the birthday entertainment. And what is the moral? That people who write plays for children to act should be careful what language they put into the mouths of the actors, and that parents should use careful supervision in such matters, seeing there is "no sanitary board for dealing with the adulteration of mental food.

Space forbids more than a glance at a few of the scenes depicted. Most ludicrously funny is the visit to the Exhibition, where Carl, Most ludicrously funny is the visit to the Exhibition, where Carl, the husband, vexes and annoys his wife by paying what she considered undue attention to a barmaid, and ends in trying a little "of one of the lady's liqueurs," with a result that as "he had but a poor stomach" he had to be led home. To complete the misery and discomfiture of his devoted spouse, it happened that a neighbouring matron, Frau Bergfeldt, whom Frau Buchholz hated with a hatred known only to female minds, passed just as the crowd began to assemble round the poor suffering atom of humanity as began to assemble round the poor suffering atom of humanity as he sat down sobbing, maudling and sentimental, on a chair.

Then there is a chapter devoted to Herr Buchholz's toothache, when every remedy under the sun was tried upon the hapless mouth of the patient and long-suffering Carl, who allowed him-self "to be dosed ad infinitum with old women's nostrums," till at length, his stock of patience being exhausted, he calls his daughter a silly hen and his wife a stupid goose! The whole scene is intenseley charming.

Of course, Frau Buchholz, like all mothers, was only too eager to get her daughters off her hands—always scheming, planning, contriving, and alas! be it added, failing—'tis the nature of the sex female. How she used every occasion to ensure Dr. Wrenz-shen for a sex in law them and the sex female. chen for a son-in-law; how, when all seemed ripe and ready, the whole fabric thus carefully and thoughtfully raised fell to the ground like a pack of cards, when on a certain memorable occa-sion he never even paid the Frau the compliment of rising off his seat to shake hands with her; how, it subsequently transpired that he had burst his trousers in playing at skittles! All this must be read. No criticism could carry any idea of the charm and attractiveness of such a chapter of accidents.

The interest centres naturally in the Frau Buchholz, as careful, zealous, honest-minded a spouse as ever fell to man's lot to possess.

Ready at all times—as is not unusual—to find fault and carp at poor Carl's failings and delinquencies, she nevertheless recognised, and was at times only too proud to proclaim, his good qualities and virtues. The poor man plays a secondary part in the drama of life. A steady, persevering tradesmap, he seems content to leave to the wife of his bosom the cares, the troubles, the anxieties, which fill up the measure of the "Buchholz family." The daughters are plain, unpretentious girls, fair samples of middle-class German maidens, educated simply, with frugal notions and unsophisticated tastes. Hence the reader naturally rejoices when after all misadventures, one of them is fortunate enough to secure as a huzband the discourteous Dr. Wrenzchen—trousers and all!

But we have omitted two characters; one a young girl, who, marrying a poor legal functionary with but small means, contrives to make his home as happy, and her life as hopeful and pleasant, as if the lot of the rich had fallen to the share of the poor. Yes, Auguste and Herr Weigelt are nible characters, and many a reader may learn from them a lesson of contentment, which it would be well to lay to heart. Lastly, there is the spoilt child, "Eduard," whose misdeeds reached a climax when a poor tame rabbit, "Sniff" by name, which had been given him as a present, was so tormented that it had to be "put in a frying-pan to give it a pleasanter existence!"

But enough. Reader, read for thyself, and, at least for one or two evenings of thy life, pleasure—pure, unalloyed, and irresistible—will be thy lot.

THE BOYS' AND GIRLS' OWN ANNUALS FOR 1885-86.*

• What youthful aspirant to fame has not heard of the "Boys' Own Annual?" a work as necessary to school-boy existence as is Shakespeare to the reader who has reached years of discretion! And if we say that the volume for 1885-86 is in every respects up to the high rank of excellence which has for such a lengthened period characterised this publication, what stripling but can realise the worth of this valuable and useful adjunct to the pleasures of the playground? For, after all, play is a "science"—at any rate, in these days of advanced progress. Let not the cricketer who can hold his own on the village green fancy that he would ever get a place in the "Harrow" eleven, still less in a "'Varsity" team! Equally does the remark apply to boating, football, fives, swimming, lawn-tennis, and the many other sports which swell up the formidable total of the curriculum of play. No, a thousand times no. If a lad wishes to excel he must "work" at play just as if he would with lessons; and for a guide, a help, and a companion, the "Boys' Own Annual" will stand him in good stead. Hints, not by ones, twos, or threes, but by hundreds and thousands, meet him at every turn; not, too, as regards a particular sport, or a particular pastime, but with reference to every form and class of play known to fame in this the nineteenth century of grace. If to all these advantages be added tales to interest and anecdotes to amuse, what more can a boy need as the companion of his leisure than such an elegant, tasteful, and trustworthy publication as that to which we are pleased and proud to call attention?

But as in life there is the friendly rivalry of the sexes, so in the case of food for the mind. What is given to the lad in the "Boys' Own Aunual" is afforded to the girl in the "Girls' Own Annual"; and it would be an embarrassing problem to decide which of the twain is the more entitled to commendation. Of course, the volumes differ essentially. In one instance attention is directed rather to the sterner aspect of human nature—boys must not be coddled up, they must learn early in years to battle with life; girls, on the other hand, think more of the knick-knackeries and friends of home—therein is an apprenticeship for the "gentler" features of daily existence. So the "Girls' Own Annual" touches upon dress, upon painting, music, drawing, puzzles, sewing, knitting, darning, and such-like accomplishments, light tales and pretty stories filling up the residuum of the volume. But nothing is slipshod; all is carefully written and thoughtfully revised. We have the greatest confidence in recommending these twin bocks to all youthful readers; and we venture to think not a single complaint will ever reach the editorial ear as to either sins of omission or sins of commission.

MOUNTAINEERING BELOW THE SNOW-LINE+

Mr. Paterson, an enthusiastic Scotchman, and, by an all but natural consequence, an enthusiastic angler, narrates, in this little volume, his adventures in regions below the snow limit—that is, in Wales, in the Lake District, and in Norway: giving us, however, to understand, that he is no stranger to Alpine, any more than he is to what, in modern slang, is called "Sub-Alpine," scenery.

Wales and the Lakes have been described ad nauseam, and our author's experiences in Norway are the most interesting part of his book; these are really well worth perusing. He took—not without a view to piscatorial successes—a route which has been much, and very undeservedly, neglected, the way, that is, through the Sœtersdal, and Thelemarken, to the Gausta Mountain, "the lion of South Norway," the summit of which he duly reached.

Our author is an observer; but his observations are made with too direct a reference to his own individuality; they are subjective rather than objective, and the first person singular plays a great part. He is never tired of describing himself as a wirv person, he (p. 84) bounds "like a roo straight down the fell," and so on. A traveller who, in perfect health, can thus dwell on his own personality and feelings, may well be advised to take a course of study of that most fascinating of books of travel, Mathew's "Diary of an Invalid," in which the man, though sick and naturally introspective, is so thoroughly "sunk" in the subject with which he is dealing.

Mr. Paterson is not impressed with the cleanliness of the Norwegians. They are right good fellows; but they live too far North to care for cold water. A German is not usually a very strict judge in this matter; but we have rarely read a more uncompromising verdict than that passed by a German on the denizens of Scetersdal. "There are," said he, "dirty people in all countries; but, if you take a Scetersdal man, and throw him against the wall, he will stick!"

Our traveller presents us with a comparative list of Norwegian, and of English, names of places, which is very suggestive. He is, too, a "fiddler," and we hope that he has brought with him, from the unfrequented regions which he has visited, a goodly stock of those marvellous Scandinavian melodies which are gradually dying out, and cannot too soon be rescued.

We conclude with a few lines, as a specimen of our author's style as a narrator:—"Down we flew, heel to earth; across slides of slippery grass, slopes of loose shingle, composed of angular splinters that seemed almost quick with life; and down cascaded torrents, whose beds were of massive rock, with store of cruel angles pitiless, to remind the bungling cragsman of the inevitable logic of facts. The danger was not great; though experience, quick sight, steady nerves, and sure-footedness doubtless stood us in good stead; and many times we had to hesitate, cast about, and circumnavigate an ugly drop. But we were glad to find ourselves safe and sound on the edge of the dark waters of the Llyn, after a descent of a thousand feet."

MAJOR J. H. LAWRENCE-ARCHER, author of "Commentaries on the Punjab Campaign," is publishing with Messrs. W. H. Allen and Co. a work which will be of considerable interest, in the shape of a history of all orders of knighthood throughout the world. It will be an imperial quarto volume, with numerous illustrations, giving in a succinct style all essential particulars regarding the extant Sovereign Orders of the world, derived from original and official sources, and will be named "The Orders of Chivalry."

WE have received for review from the Society for Promotion of Christian Knowledge "Robinson Crusoe," "Home Sunbeams," "Hero:s of Science," "The Little Vagabond," "Pillars of Success," "Ursula's Fortune," "How Bill Sims Honoured his Father," "Great Prayer of Christendom," "The Two Horns Crooked," "Celebrated Cathedrals and Churches," "Sacred Cards;" from Messrs. Lewis "Savory's Compendium of Domestic Medicine;" and from Messrs. Longmans, Green and Co., "Reminiscences and opinions of Sir Francis Hastings Doyle."

A GENERAL Order has been published containing particulars of the reorganisation of the Corps of Sappers and Miners in the three Presidencies. The establishment will consist of 1.431 combatants in the Bengal corps, 1,441 in Madras, and 905 of Bombay.

Writing of the rumo ired disturbances in Badakshan the Pioneersays that so far back as the spring of 1881 the Ameer abolished the post of hereditary ruler owing to the constant quarrels among the tribal leaders and placed a Governor at Fyzabad in supremecommand of the whole province. This man Sirdar Abdulla Jan was still in charge of Badakshan when Mr. Ney Elias visited Fyzabad last summer, and the Ameer's authority was acknowledged from the Oxus to the Hindu Kush. To talk, therefore of the Afghans "subjugating" Badakshan now is, jour contemporary observes, absurd. There may have been disturbances between the garrison and the people—such things are very common in the outlying provinces of Afghanistan; but this is probably all. We shall, possibly, be told in a week or two that Russia is massing troops on the Oxus "owing to the war in Badakshan"; the Peacemaker of Central Asia is only too anxious to interfere in Afghan Turkistin and the petty provinces on the northern slopes of the Hindu Kush lately visited by Colonel Lockhart.

. THE LIFE POLICY DISPUTE AT CEYLON.

As we anticipated, we have received an explanation from the "Standard Life Assurance Company" regarding the agitation which is at present troubling the minds of the policy-holders in that Company at Ceylon, and which agitation has given rise to what we think is a very unnecessary outbreak of augry feeling in the island where, according to Bishop Heber:—

"Every prospect pleases, Man alone is vile."

The explanation of the Standard Company is to the following effect:—The point of difference between the Company and their Ceylon policy-holders has reference to policies issued before the date of the Government ordinance in 1872 declaring that sterling payments would thereafter be held as discharged in Ceylon on payment of ten rupees for each £1 sterling.

The company's policies issued previous to that date are stated in sterling currency, the sum assured being payable "at the office of the said Company in Colombo, Ceylon, from which this policy has been issued, or at the office of the said Company in London."

From the date of this Government ordinance the premiums, with a few exceptions, have, we are informed, been paid to the Company and received by them at the par rate then fixed; and such being the case, and the option as to payment by an ordinary rule of law resting with the Company, the Company holds itself entitled both in law in equity to discharge the policy in Ceylon in rupees' currency.

Although this contention on the part of the Company has been held good at law in a certain case decided at Ceylon, it is the contention which the policy-holders dispute.

It is, however, only fair to the Standard Office that the explanation furnished to us by its Head Secretary should be fully given. He states that all claims have been paid in sterling when death has occurred in this country. With regard to the Bonus certificates, about which there has been so much agitation in Ceylon, he writes:—

In accordance with the general rule the bonus certificates recently issued from this office stated the sum assured and bonus in rupees and the question of the currency in which the policies will be eventually paid has thus been raised, the policy-holders maintaining that the sum assured in the policy, being stated in sterling, and the receipts bearing to be for sterling money, they are entitled to payment in sterling wherever death occurs; whereas our contention is that the currency having been fixed by law, and the premiums having been paid in rupees, we are under no legal or moral obligation to pay except in the same currency. To avoid dispute, however, we have already cabled to our agents in Colombo, instructing them to endorse all policies as payable, both sum assured and bonus, in sterling, irrespective of the place of death, in the event of the assured agreeing to pay future premiums in sterling or in rupees at the exchange of the day; and as we do not open up the question as regards past payments received in rupee currency, we are in hopes that this solution of the difficulty will be accepted as a liberal one by those interested. The question, however, has been discussed very intemperately by the Ceylon Press, and also by the Press in Madras, where a somewhat similar difficulty has arisen, excepting that, of course, the ordinance of 1872 has no bearing on the Indian question. The Indian policies are rupee policies, payable at the office of the said company in Calcutta (or Bombay) from which this policy has been issued, or at the office of the said company in London, in sterling money, at the rate of two shillings per rupee; our practice as regards these policies having been to pay in sterling when death took place in England, or in rupees when death took place in India; though, even in this latter case, many exceptions have been made in favour of the assured. This Indian question has not yet come before the board, but it may very possibly be settled on the same lines as the question in Ceylon.

Thus rests the matter at present. It is to be regretted that any difference should arise in dispute between an Insurance Company and its policy-holders. Such a Company must naturally be, like Cæsar's wife, above all suspicion; and we were not in error in supposing that a great institution like the "Standard" would put the most liberal interpretation upon its contracts. But we remember the commotion caused in India regarding the Albert Assurance Office, and cannot wonder at the anxiety displayed by certain writers in the Ceylon and Madras Press, although such anxiety might have been expressed in more temperate language.

CAPTAIN E. BALFE, Deputy Judge Advocate, Northern Circle, has been entrusted with the duties of D.A.Q.M.G., Sind District, in addition to his other duties, vice Captain Bayly, proceeded on service to Burma, and pending the return of Captain Chase, V.C., from furlough.

SOLDIERS suffering from fever at Meean Meer are to be moved to other healthy plain stations in the Luhore division, where accommodation may be available.

Now that Native corps receive their cash direct from Civil Treasuries, and not through the agency of Circle Paymasters as formerly, it has been ordered that they shall sign a declaration to their accounts similar to that furnished by paymasters of British regiments and officers commanding batteries of Royal Artillery.

It has been decided to allow an officer of the British service on the Home Establishment a free passage from the point of debarkation to his destination, when appointed to the command of a brigade in India.

LIEUTENANT J. H. CHRISTIE, Wing Officer 39th Bengal Infantry, has been detailed for the duty of paying pensioners residing within the Presidency circle.

THE uniform of the Calcutta Volunteer Rifle Corps is likely to be changed to scarlet before the drill season commences. A very small majority voted for this colour.

THE Quetta Station Hospital is to be equipped for twelve per cent. on the authorised strength of the garrison, instead of ten per cent. as at present.

The relief of the garrison batteries of artillery this trooping season now stands as under:—5-1 North Irish Division, Aden to Bombay; 6-1 South Irish Division, Aden to England; 1-1 Western Division, Bombay to Aden; 1-1 Scottish Division, Bombay to Aden; 8-1 London Division, Tonghoo to Bombay; 4-1 Lancashire Division, Rawul Pindi to Tonghoo; 2-1 Eastern Division, England to Pindi. The 5-1 Lancashire Division will stand fast at Fort William. This battery with the 8-1 London Division will proceed to Aden in 1887-88, and to England in the season 1888-89.

The Government of India, with a view of economy under the present financial pressure, have decided to reduce the staff pay of Rs. 700 to Rs. 600 per mensem of the Superintendent and of Rs. 700 to Rs. 600 per mensem of the Superintendent and Agent for Army Clothing, Madras, on the retirement from office of the present incumbent, Colonel William Shapter Hunt. The staff pay of the Superintendent of Family Payments and Pensions also comes under the official shears. This officer draws Rs. 600 per mensem as staff pay, which amount will now be cut down to Rs. 400. The consolidated pay of the Judge Advocate General, viz., Rs. 2,000 per mensem, will be reduced to Rs. 1,800, thus effecting a large saying annually effecting a large saving annually.

THE Government of India have sanctioned the conversion of the Mounted Company, Calcutta Volunteers, into a cavalry corps, to be called the Calcutta Mounted Rifles.

MAJOR WACE, Superintendent of the Gunpowder Factory at Cossipore, will shortly proceed home on duty, taking with him his chief engineer, for the purchase of new machinery for the making of the new cartridges for the Martini-Enfield Rifle, and making of the new cartridges for the Martin-Enneld Mine, and for making themselves acquainted with the process of manufacture of solid-drawn cases, &c. It is stated that Major J. G. Stone, Superintendent of the Small Arms Ammunition Factory at Dum-Dum, will likewise be sent home for instruction in the manufacture of the new cartridges. The importance of these manufacturing establishments is daily becoming more manifest, and ere long Government will be required to pay higher salaries than now to the officers holding them.

In November last a man was punished by the Cantoment Magis_ trate of Fyzabad for supplying liquor to a private soldier employed at the time as a telegraph signaler in the Civil Telegraph Office at Fyzabad. The conviction was appealed to the Commissioner on the ground that Private Jones, a full private of the Lincolnshire Regiment, attached temporarily on pay and rations to the Leinster Regiment, was not a soldier under section 14 Cantonments Act III. of 1880. The Officiating Commissioner, Col. Currie, dismissed the appeal, holding that, under the circumstances, Private Jones was "a soldier." The case was appealed to the Officiating Judicial Commissioner, who held "that a private in an European regiment of the Commissioner of the control of the control of the Commissioner of the control of the contr Jones was "a soldier." The case was appealed to the Officiating Judicial Commissioner, who held "that a private in an European regiment, employed as a telegraph signaller, was not a soldier within the meaning of the said section." The Military Authorities, not content with the Judicial Commissioner's finding, referred the matter to the Supreme Government, and we see by the Government of India Gazette, dated 11th instant, that this doubt has been cleared up, and that in the future, whatever he may have been in the past, a private in an European regiment will still be a been in the past, a private in an European regiment will still be a soldier, even though he may be employed as a telegraph signaller.

MAJOR FRANK LEIGH, of the 2nd Punjab Volunteer Rifles, has been appointed Honorary A.D.C., to the Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab. The Pioneer says that it is a good appointment on personal grounds, and better, because it would seem probable that the Punjab Government may soon be shorn of its Military Secretary, in which case Major Leigh's intimate knowledge and zealous interest in the working of Volunteer Corps may be made variable by Sin Charles Aitonomy with advantage to all conavailable by Sir Charles Aitchison with advantage to all concerned.

A CHANGE which will be regarded generally as for the better is likely shortly to be made in the uniform of the Bengal Infantry. It is proposed to lengthen the at present exceedingly short skirt of the sepoy's tunic, an alteration which will both improve his appearance when in uniform, and conduce to his mental satisfaction when so arrayed. Certainly nothing could be more ungainly and less suited to Oriental troops than the full dress tunic in which the Bengal sepoy is now habited.

THE demand for medical officers in Burma is steadily increasing, and a requisition has lately been received from the principal medical officer with the Burma expeditionary force for the services of fourteen more commissioned medical officers. This requisition includes two brigade surgeons from the Indian Medical Service, but as there are none of that rank available, two surgeons-major will probably have to be sent. Nine of the officers will be required to embark at once, and the remainder in a few weeks.

BRIGADIER-GENERAL C. B. LE MESURIER, Commanding Presidency District, Bengal, has left Calcutta for Jubbulpore, to take over command of the Saugor District. The command of the Presidency District devolves on Colonel Smith, 8th Bengal Infantry, at Dorunda; and the garrison of Fort William and Alipore on Colonel Way, 7th Bengal Infantry.

THE Commander-in-Chief of Bombay has directed the issue of a set of rules regarding the conduct of summary courts martial. The particular attention of all British officers serving with Native troops is called to these rules, and it is intimated that "the Commander-in-Chief will make every officer who holds a summary court martial personally responsible for the mistakes in procedure, now so frequent, and which are almost invariably due to carelessness, do not occur in future. It is the bounden duty of every officer holding a summary court martial to study carefully the Indian Articles of War, defining the powers and laying down the procedure of these courts.

THE following officers will accompany Sir Frederick Roberts on tour on the 1st instant:—Colonel H. Collett, C.B., Officiating Quartermaster General in India; Major J. S. M. Hamilton, aidede-camp; and Surgeon-Major W. Taylor, Surgeon-Major to his Excellency.

An Army Circular has been issued, notifying the re-organiza-tion of the Corps of Sappers and Miners in the three Presidencies. In Bengal and Madras the total strength will be 1,431, including In Bengal and Madras the total strength will be 1,431, including 20 British officers, viz, 1 Commandant, 1 Superintendent of Instruction, 1 Superintendent of Park, 1 Adjutant, and 8 Company Commanders and Company Officers. There will also be 1 Warrant Officer attached to the Park, a Sergeant-Major, 1 Quartermaster-Sergeant, 12 Sergeants, 14 Corporals, and 14 "Second" Corporals. In Bombay the strength will be 905 of all ranks. A company on service will number 173 combatants.

THE 7th Bengal Cavalry left Calcutta on the 23rd ult. in the hired transport Nerbudda and the Indian Government steamer Canning. The men and horses had embarked in both steamers by about 9 a.m., after which the vessels at once proceeded down the river. The Nerbudda reached Diamond Harbour at 3 p.m. on Thursday and the Canning was at Achipur at the same time.

An exchange of battalions has been sanctioned between Captains Trevor and Russoll, Royal Sussex Regiment. Captain Trevor will embark for ludia with the draft now under orders for the 2nd battalion.

THE DUKE OF CONNAUGHT (although by his seniority on the list he cannot obtain his next step before 1838) will be promoted to the rank of Lieutenant-General after his return from his divisional

Miscellaneous.

THE last Calcutta issue of the Gazette of India contains a list of coins acquired under the Indian Treasure Trove Act and available for sale to Numismatists. The coins comprise old Hindoo and Buddhist punched coins, and coins of Pathan Sikendar Lodi, Muhammad Shah, and Ahmed Shah Bahadoor.

THE men forming the escort of the late Gilgit Mission have been inspected at Simla by the Viceroy and the Commander-in-Chief. The men are to receive six months' special leave in consideration of their services.

The Pioneer learns by telegram from Jammu that, in recognition of services rendered, the Maharajah of Cashmere has ceded to Raja Amarsing, his younger brother, the territory known as Budrawar or Chota Cashmere, thereby doubling his income. This act of generosity is much applauded, inasmuch as Raja Amarsingh's policy has always been characterised by justice and an earnest desire to benefit the State. Mr. Nilambar Mukerji, late Finance Minister, still insists not only in remaining in Jammu, but also in attending the Durbar daily and giving opinions gratuitously during the sittings of the Council. The Maharajah refuses to alter his decision in Mr. Mukerji's case of summary dismissal without pension; and it seems likely that when the Resident arrives in the course of the week steps will be taken to enforce his Highness's orders. Our contemporary's Jammu correspondent also states that "satisfaction of a nature unknown heretofore is being displayed by all classes of the people who have been taken by surprise at the firmness of the Maharajah. His Highness's character has apparently been misunderstood; his action in this affair, as well as in other matters of moment to the State, affords clear proof that he has closely watched current events since his accession."

Trade between Upper and Lower Burma is increasing in the most satisfactory way. In Rangoon large quantities of sult, rice, and general goods are awaiting shipment to places beyond the old frontier, the Irrawaddy Flotilla Company being unable to meet the requirements of shippers. Their inability is partly due to the large amount of river transport required by the Government, and to the detention of many flats at Mandalay owing to the floods. The Flotilla Company are contemplating an increase to their fleet, as they are convinced trade will still further expand.

The accident on the Bolan Line on the 17th ult., near Kundilani Station, occurred as the train was passing over a bridge, and was caused by one waggon which got derailed, and led to nine other loaded waggons capsizing and falling into the river. Two men were killed and five seriously wounded, all Natives. The latter are now in the hospital here. Mr. Carnell, the District Traffic Superintendent, and Mr. Jones, the Assistant Locomotive Superintendent, both started at once to the scene of the accident, and the Traffic Superintendent was also expected.

Indian Cotton Manufactures.—The attention of Indian cotton manufacturers is being directed to the present condition of their trade, and the means whereby it may be improved and placed on a substantial footing. The production of Indian looms is far greater than the home demand upon them, and therefore markets for the surplus output are sought in China, Japan, and on the East coast of Africa, where it enters into competition with European goods. Inasmuch as this export trade is liable to being disturbed by complications between foreign Powers, as has been the case by the French aggression in Tonking, it is seriously discussed in India whether it is desirable to build up a foreign trade, and whether it would not be more advantageous to endeavour to meet the requirements of the home trade, which is virtually monopolised by Laucashire. In so doing manufacturers feel that they would not be harassed by foreign political complications, and although they would have a very heavy task before them in endeavouring to supplant Lancashire piece goods, yet they consider that the prize is worthy of a severe struggle for its attainment. There is, however, much to be done by Indian manufacturers before they can enter upon the contest. During the last few years they have availed themselves largely of the improvements in textile machinery, and many eminent English textile machinists have received good orders from them, but they admit that many of their mills are not so well equipped as are those of their Lancashire competitors. With their present machinery, good in parts, but not complete as a whole, they are placed at a disadvantage in competing for the home trade. This is not a very serious difficulty to overcome, for it only requires a comparatively small outlay of additional capital, and English machinists are ready to supply their wants. There is, however, in existence a powerful barrier in the way of successful competition for the home trade which cannot be removed all at once. The quality of goods made from Indian grown cott is an improvement in the quality of Indian grown cotton. This is a problem for agriculturists, and it must be solved before the aspirations of Indian cotton manufacturers can be realised.—

Textile Recorder.

A LAHOBE ROMANCE.—The rather sober neighbourhood of Mochi Gate has just been startled out of its propriety by nothing less than an elopement. As deposed to by the mother of the girl, the facts would appear to be as follow:—A young man described as of Armenian descent, a short time ago took up his residence by the side of a house occupied by a widow and her family, the latter consisting of an equal number of boys and girls. An acquaintance was soon struck up with the sons of the widow, through whose office an introduction to the daughter (the young lady in question, etat 16) was shortly after procured. Next the usual romantic elements, even to the traditional means of escape, namely, out of the window by the aid of a rope-ladder at two o'clock in the morning, were adopted by the young lady on the occasion. The police have of course been informed of the circumstances, and a warrant has been issued for the apprehension of the fugitives, one of whom, it has since been alleged, is already married, his wife being just now at Allahabad.—Civič and Military Gazette.

Vacancies in our Legislative Council.—There will be two vacancies in our Legislative Council owing to the expiry of the period of office of the Hon. Mr. Budrudin Tyabji and the Hon. Mr. Raste. Mr. Budrudin has so satisfactorily discharged his duties as a member of the Council that the public will be glad if he be appointed again. To the other vacancy we earnestly hope Lord Reay will appoint a really competent Native gentleman, commanding the respect of the Native community. We hear it is intended to appoint one of the Native chiefs or sirdars in the place of Mr. Raste, but that would be a practically useless selection, for, in the case of a Native chief, he will not be able to represent the people of this Presidency, as he will be regarded as an outsider not directly interested in them, while in the case of a Sirdar it will be difficult to find an able and educated man. If it is intended to nominate someone from the Deccan, no one more competent in every way than Rao Bahadur Krishnaji Laksuman Nulkar will be found. But if a Guzerati is required, we hope the claims af Mr. Javerilal Umiashankar will be considered.—Indu Prakash.

The Prince of Wales.—The Sub-Committee, consisting of the Earl Cadogan, Chairman; the Earl of Rosebery, Lord Napier of Magdala, the Lord Mayor of London, Sir John Rose, Sir Robert G. W. Herbert, with Colonel Sir Owen T. Burne and Sir Arthur N. Birch, Honorary Secretaries, have had laid before them the following letter from H.R.H. the Prince of Wales addressed to the Chairman:—"Abergeldie Castle, September 19th, 1886.—"My Dear Cadogan,—As I understand that you are Chairman of the Committee which has been formed for the purpose of collecting funds for a testimonial to be presented to me as Executive President of the Colonial and Indian Exhibition, I wish to write and express to you and the other gentlemen who have so kindly moved in this matter, how deeply I appreciate the compliment they propose to pay me. I feel, however, that I cannot accept any personal present, though I am most sensible of the kind feeling which has prompted it, but as you are aware that it is suggested in commemoration of Her Majesty's Jubilee Year, to establish an 'Imperial Institution' for the Colonies and India, in the promotion of which I take the deepest interest, I should be most grateful if the subscribers would allow the funds collected for my testimonial to be applied in aid of that object. Should they kindly do so, it will be an ample reward to me for any services I may have rendered to make the Exhibition of 1886 a success.—Bolieve me, my dear Cadogan, very sincerely yours, Albert Edward P.—The Earl Cadogan, very sincerely yours, Albert Edward President, to the Chairman of this Committee, in which his Royal Highness, while conveying his grateful appreciation of the proposed testimonial to himself, expresses the wish that it may not take such a form, but that any funds collected may be applied towards the 'Imp

An attempt which was made last year by Government to promote the use of cinchona in the Central Provinces, by offering it mote the use of cinciona in the Central Provinces, by othering it for sale in small quantities at cost price, has proved a failure. People were willing to use cinchona if they could obtain it gratis, but they would not purchase it even if they could obtain it at cost price. Quinine, on the other hand, was eagerly purchased, and the authorities have, therefore, given orders that in future the febrifuge shall be available for purchase in much smaller quantities than it has hitherto been.

H. G. KEENE,

Author of "Peepul Leaves," "Under the Rose," &c.

"Mr. Keene has not, we believe, a great reputation in England as yet, but in India he seems to be well known."—PALL MALL GAZETTE.

"Mr. Keene's is no untried hand. Well known as a poet in North-Western India, in this volume there is nothing to gainsay his right to the name. . . . Often sweet and graceful, always vigorous and thoughtful, his verses possess the true lyric swing."—QUEEN.

"He has a gift of sweet and pathetic expression which endows his lyrical efforts with a charm and freshness quite their own."—Home News.

"We think Mr. Keene is at his best when original; and prefer the latter half of the book to the translations with which the first part is filled."—Oxford TATLER.

"It is impossible to avoid being struck, not only with their beauty and tenderness, but with the fact that they are almost throughout in a minor key. . . . Very sweet, very beautiful, but very sad."—ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

"To our mind Mr. Keene's original verses are more likely to bring him fame and give his readers pleasure. There is always point and interest in them, even in the shortest."-- LITERARY WORLD.

"VOICE OF INDIA.

TO THE PUBLIC OPINION OF THE PEOPLE OF INDIA.

THERE are in England large classes willing and anxious to do justice to India, but they find it very difficult to know how to act. They complain that Indian questions are intricate; that the opinions of official experts are contradictory; and that the people of India are dumb, and do not give expression to their needs. This defect is now remedied by publishing MONTHLY (in Bombay) a magazine somewhat similar in nature to Public Opinion in England, which provides a compendium of all that is most valuable in the native journals throughout India on the leading topics of the day. The Voice of India thus gives forth a clear sound, interpreting between the rulers and the ruled, and making known the true wishes and feelings of the Indian veople.

The Magazine advocates no views of its own. It seeks only to reflect with care and accuracy the views set forth in the native press. The Indian people are naturally decile and consorvative; and it will be seen that the writings thus brought before the English public are characterised by a knowledge of facts, and generally by practical good sense and moderation. No doubt grievances are from time to time being set forth; but it is a policy of prudence, no less than of justice to give these grievances. A fair constitutional hearing. Accordingly, it is hoped that this publication will be subsyched for by Members of Parliament and other public men desirous of dealing with Indian questions; and shist the facts thus brought together in a conyadient form will be of value to journalists and other public writers. It is specially desired to bring the Magazine before the public in Clubs, Reading-rooms, Libraries, and Institutes throughout England, with a view to promote a sustained and Intelligent interest in the welfare of our Indian Empire, comprising as it does 220 millions of our fellow-subjects.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

MONDAY, OCTOBER 25, 1886.

General Intelligence.

[By Overland Mail.]

THE Overland Mail brings us letters and advices from Bombay to the 8th October; from Allahabad and Madras to the 6th October; and from Calcutta to the 5th October.

THE DUKE AND DUCHESS OF CONNAUGHT have had a busy time of it during their stay at Poons. On the 30th ultimo they attended the Horse Show, and were subsequently present at a reception held in their honour at Ganesh Khind.

On the evening of the 1st inst. they attended an entertainment of Native music given by the Gayan Samaj, and the same night were the guests of the Royal Engineers at a Fancy Dress Ball at the Club Assembly Rooms.

On the 4th inst. they attended the opening of a silk and lace exhibition in the Native city, which Sir William Wedderburn described as a local effort of independent enterprise in support of the Government policy for the promotion of technical education.

An address was presented to their Royal Highnesses on behalf of the mercantile community of the city; and the Duke, in replying, congratulated them on the reintroduction of a manufacture for which India was formerly famous.

On the same occasion Lord Reay asked their Royal Highnesses to give the same impulse to the improvement of male and female industrial skill that had been given by the Prince Consort in England. England and India, he added, must join hands in technical education to meet the fierce competition of the industrial world.

On the 5th inst. the Duke reviewed the troops of the Poona Division, and at the end of the inspection congratulated Major-General Sir Sollyflood on their efficiency.

LATER in the day their Royal Highnesses opened the new municipal market in the Native city, and, in reply to an address, congratulated the Municipality of Poona on the completion of a work which was worthy of the traditions of the ancient Deccan capital.

In the evening the Duke and Duchess, with Lord and Lady Reay, were received at the Poona Native Institution by the Hon. M. Melvill, Sir Jamsetjee Jeejeebhoy, &c.

THE Royal visitors left Poona on the 6th inst., being accompanied as far as Bhosawal by Mr. A. T. Crawford and Captain Herbert.

THE DUKE OF CONNAUGHT has been invited to be present at the ceremony of laying the foundation-stone of the Punjab Chiefs' College at Lahore, in November.

Official reports from Upper Burma show that Mandalay town is orderly, and that the district is much quieter than it has been.

THE Bhamo frontier is reported to be generally satisfactory

A pretender to the Governorship of Mogung has been killed by the Burmese.

DACOIT leaders have been captured in Sagaine and Yen. The authorities attach importance to these captures.

THE American missionaries at Rangoon state that the arms recently imported into Burma by them were not intended for the superintendent of their press, but were imported by an out-station missionary for Karens, who are obliged to protect themselves against dacoits.

THE Government of India has issued a resolution appointing a Commission to inquire into the subject of the admission of Natives to the various branches of the public service. The Commission will consist of fifteen members, including three civilians and representatives of the non-official European, Eurasion, and Native communities. Sir Charles Aitchison will be president.

THE HON. H. St. A. GOODBICH, the Madras representative in the Viceregal Legislative Council, has been granted furlough for nine months from the 6th of December next. Another officer will, therefore, have to be selected to represent Madras in Calcutta.

THE Finance Committee have concluded their inquiry

Serious floods are reported to have occurred in the Godavery district of the Madras Presidency. It is also reported that a terrible riot occurred between a large number of villagers, some of whom wished to cut the bund, so as to free their villages from water, and that a hundred lives were lost.

MR. G. H. R. HART is about to retire from the post of Private Secretary to H.E. the Governor of Bombay, and return to his former department, the Finance Department at Calcutta. Mr. J. D. Rees, C.S., has been appointed Private Secretary to the Right Hon. R. Bourke, the new Governor of Madras.

SIR O. St. John has left Quetta for the new cantonment of Bori, where the work of housing the troops isbusily progressing.

LADY HELEN BLACKWOOD and the Hon. Miss Thynne will accompany Lady Roberts to England in November, Lady Helen, it is hoped eventually to return.

In order to encourage the study of the Burmese language, the Government of India has sanctioned the following rewards for officers and men who pass the examinations successfully:—For the elementary standard, Rs. 180; for the lower standard, Rs. 360; and for the higher standard, Rs. 500.

THE only pictures excluded from the Simla Fine Arts Exhibition, in deference to the British matron, were by a lady, a spinster.

It has been determined to raise an additional battalion for the 5th Goorkhas at once. By the aid of the Nepalese authorities there will probably be no difficulty in obtaining the 900 recruits required, and of areasonably good standard, during the ensuing cold season.

THE Government of India has intimated its inability to sanction in future the examination in the Native languages by Military Committees of any persons not in the service of Government.

RAHIM BAKSH, the murderer of Mr. Evans at Sibi, on the 25th August, was tried by Sir O. St. John, on the 25th September, and sentenced to death.

SIR ALFRED LYALL, it has been decided, has six months' extension of his tenure of office as Lieutenant-Governor of the North-West Provinces.

It is stated that Sir Charles Bernard's sea trip has not benefited his health, which continues in a very unsatisfactory state.

A MEETING has been held at Simla, at which the present and future of Lady Dufferin's scheme for supplying Medical Aid to Women in India was reviewed. It would appear that her Ladyship's efforts require greater support than they have hitherto received at the hands of the Natives.

THE official news from Upper Burma for the week ending the 26th ult. shows there are still many armed bands at large; but the country immediately about Mandalay is quiet. The late operations in the districts between the Chindwin and Irrawaddy rivers seem to have been successful, but the Woontho Tsawbwa has still to be dealt with. Nothing is said about the trouble Bo Shwé has given north of Thayetmyo, though the jungles are infested by his bands, and some smart skirmishing has been going on.

News comes from Mandalay that preparations have been made for opening up the ruby-mine districts very shortly. A post has been established at Kyan-Nhyat-Myo, on the left bank of the Irrawaddy, eighty miles north of Mandalay, and only forty-five from Momeit, the head-quarters of the mining industry. The strength of the garrison is fifty men of the Hampshire Regiment, 100 Sepoys of the 43rd Goorkha Light Infantry, and two divisions of Madras Sappers. Kyan-Nhyat-Myo is the base whence a column will move upon Momeit. Great sickness prevails amongst the troops at Thabyabin.

Notes of the Week.

The sad news of the untimely death of Sir Herbert Macpherson was received simultaneously throughout India and England with feelings of the deepest regret. Eloquent tributes have been paid to his memory by the Press of this country; and the whole army, English and Indian, mourns the loss of a gallant soldier and an accomplished, genial, and warm-hearted gentleman. Quiet and unostentatious in his manner, and self-effacing always, it was not given perhaps to all to know the fine inner qualities of his nature; but those who were fortunate enough to do so lament his loss as that of a personal friend.

At a special meeting of the Legislative Council which was held at Simla on Thursday, the Viceroy, in the name of the Indian Government, expressed the deep sorrow felt in India and at home at the death of this most distinguished General. "During the short time of his command in Burma," said his Excellency, "he devoted himself un-remittingly to his arduous duties, and in him England and India have lost a most talented and trustworthy officer, as well as a gallant and noble soldier." The Viceroy added that a telegram had been received from the Queen expressing her "deep sorrow at the calamity which had thus suddenly overtaken herself and the country."

A TELEGRAM from Rangoon states that General Macpherson's death will seriously affect the situation in Upper Burma, independently of the interruption to the military arrangements, because the Burmese peasantry being credulous and superstitious will be encouraged to resist, as the insurgent leaders will declare that the English General was killed by the magic they worked against them. This may be the opinion of the Times correspondent at Rangoon, founded, no doubt, upon other opinions communicated to him there, but the telegram was hardly worth its cost. The Burmese peasantry referred to have a very fair idea of the value to be put upon the assurances of the insurgent leaders. They do not want to resist the British if the British will show that they are able to protect them against these contending chiefs, but this has hitherto been our difficulty. It is no rebellion of the peasantry against British annexation as certain scribes and Pharisees at home would have us believe. As soon as the insurgent chiefs begin to realise the force of the British power their unwilling followers will soon desert them

But the difficulty in carrying on operations in such a country has not been realised by the critics at home. "It is a simple military operation," writes General White in despatches, published in the latest Blue-Book, concerning the operations in Upper Burms, "to occupy the line of water communication, and to supply garrisons based on a navigable river, but it is a service involving much fore-thought and of great practical difficulty to establish posts throughout the length and breadth of a vast roadless country, and to supply them during the hot weather and rains of Burma. All transport had to be supplied locally."

THE critics at home were liberal with advice. More sthan one wrote to the effect that the introduction of cavalry into Upper Burma was a serious blunder, the hardy ponies of the country being able to do the required work much better. This is what General White says in the same despatch:—"The operations of this campaign have falsified the supposition that cavalry is a useless arm in Upper Burma. Our experience has proved it the most effective. It has been stated in this report that it is of first importance to catch the leaders of the rebellion. In a force without cavalry this is next to impossible. The Bobs or chiefs are nearly always mounted, and the first ofly on approach of our troops. Mounted infantry on ponies cannot catch them. They have, however, the greatest dread of cavalry. In a land where only ponies are bred, the cavalry horses seem monsters to the people, and the long reach and short shrift of the lance paralyse them with fear." So much for the critics who, staying at home, would instruct commanders in the field.

For certain reasons the assumption by Sir Frederick Roberts of the command vacated by Sir Herbert Macpherson's death must cause anxiety when the seriousness of the step is calmly reflected upon. He does not go to Upper Burma to direct the operations of an army manœuvring in the field against a formidable enemy. The large force which we have in that country is split up into details scattered about in occupation of military posts, of more or less importance, which must continue to act pretty independently of each other. When the weather will permit of the necessary movements being made, there is every reason to believe that dacoity and insurgency will collapse, and that further arrangements will be more of police than military requirements. In no way can the coming work be considered as a great campaign requiring the exceptional abilities of a great commander. But the presence of General Roberts in Upper Burma means his absence from Upper India, where, if there be truth in the saying that "coming events cast their s'hadows before," it would appear that it is most needed.

It is pleasant to learn from a Times telegram that Sir W. Ridgeway with the whole of the mission reached Cabul safely on the 15th inst. and were entertained as the guests of the Ameer on a magnificent scale, and that a hearty welcome was offered to them everywhere. It will be pleasant to believe also, upon the authority of the correspondent who telegraphs, that "whatever other results are achieved by the Commission, it has certainly bound Afghanistan to England." But there is some wisdom in the aphorism which says, "it is better not to prophecy until after the event."

The Society for the Suppression of the Opium Trade are rejoicing in the receipt of a letter from the Marquis Tseng, addressed to the President, the Chairman of the Executive Committee, the Treasurer, and the Secretary of that philanthropic body, acknowledging the receipt of a "most interesting address" on the question of opium in China. The Marquis "cannot feel very sanguine," but he trusts that the Society will continue its exertions to assist the British Government "with a view of agreeing to measures that would reduce each year the quantity of importation and consumption of the drug." When this is done "my Government would surely lose no time in following the example, and putting an effectual check upon the growth of opium in China." This assurance does not contradict but rather verifies the proverb that, when the sky falls, larks may be caught. The Marquis must be somewhat of a humourist; at all events, the whole correspondence shows that there are farces which can be played on the political as well as on the theatrical stage.

THE report of the complimentary dinner given at the Northbrook Club to the new Governor of Madras will be received with as much satisfaction in India as it has been received with here. Lord Northbrook's graceful compliments were acknowledged with all modesty by Mr. Bourke, but in a speech which compressed much telling matter, and which, giving not a little insight into character, promised well for the success which all his friends feel sure the new Governor of Madras will attain. Holding positions on opposite sides of the House of Commons in that great arena of political strife in England, it was pleasant to find that all party differences were ignored where the subject matter was one affecting the well'are of India, even to a limited extent. Those who carp at the shortcomings of British rule in India would do well to pender on the lesson conveved through the lips of Lord ponder on the lesson conveyed through the lips of Lord Northbrook, the Liberal ex-Governor-General, and those of Mr. Bourke, the present Conservative Governor. When men of such stamp sink all differences for one end—where India is concerned—the duty of upholding the honour, justice, and beneficence of British rule in that country, there need be no fear of our Empire there enduring.

CALCUTTA, OCT. 24. The order issued regarding the reorganisation of the Bengal Native Infantry directs that the regiments shall be linked to-Native Infantry directs that the regiments shall be linked together in groups of three, except certain corps, such as the Pioneers and Goorkhas, to which the double battalion system is applied. No change is made in the number or designations of the regiments or in the conditions of enlistment, save that in the event of war Sepoys will be liable to be transferred to any one of the linked battalions. A battalion when warned for service will be raised by transfers to a strength of 1,000 effectives, and one battalion of each group will remain behind as depôt to enlist and train recruits for the service battalions. There seems to be some difference of opinion regarding the merits of the new scheme, certain critics holding that it does not go far enough, that the union between the battalions should be more complete, and that, as the liability to transfer is limited to a time of war, there will be some danger of the Sepoys regarding such transfer as a be some danger of the Sepoys regarding such transfer as a grievance.

The same order directs the formation of active and garrison reserves for the Bengal Native Infantry and the Punjab frontier force. The active reserve will consist of men who have served with the colours not less than five or more than 12 years, and will for the present be limited to 100 men per battalion. The garri on reserve, formed of soldiers who have completed 21 years' service, will be unlimited in number, and will not be liable to serve beyond India. The men of both reserves not being pensioners will receive a monthly retaining fee. The active reserve sioners will receive a monthly retaining fee. The active reserve will be embodied for training during one month yearly, and the garrison reserve during one month of every alterrate year. Invalid pension after 15 years of service is abolished. The ordinary pension will now be granted after 21 years' service, and a higher pension after 32 years' service. The periods for earning various rates of good conduct pay are considerably shortened. The general effect of these changes will be to improve greatly the

The Viceroy will leave Simla on Thursday and proceed to Bahawulpore, and then to Lahore, where he will hold a Durbar, which the principal Punjab chiefs are to attend. He is then to go vid Delhi and Ahmedabad to the Bombay and Madras Presidencies, visiting various places of interest, and to embark at Pondicherry for Calcutta on December 9th.

The visit of the Duke and Duchess of Connaught to Simla was protracted owing to the illness of the Duchess, who has been suffering from a sharp attack of fever, but her Royal Highness is now reported to be better. A rumour is prevalent that the Duke will succeed General Macpherson as Commander in-Chief in Madras.

It is stated that Kakoo Maharance, widow of the notorious Nana Sahib, died at Khatmandoo, in Nepaul, on October 2nd.

The Pioneer newspaper gives an account of a recent occurrence in Rajpootana which shows the hold that ancient superstitions still have among the Natives. Some years ago the Native States of Oodeypore and Tonk, with a view of simplifying their boundaries, exchanged certain villages near Neemuch. In this process a village inhabited entirely by Brahmins passed from Oodeypore to the Nawab of Tonk. This village had been granted Odeypore to the Nawab of Tonk. This village had been granted in perpetuity to the Brahmins by a former Maharana of Odeypore, subject only to the nominal annual fee of 12 rupees for protection. After the exchange the Tonk authorities imposed a revenue assessment, which was raised from time to time till it reached 500 rupees annually. Successive deputations of the villagers proceeded to Tonk to lay the case before the Durbar, but without effect. Thereupon the Brahmins assembled and decided by the voices of all present, women as well as men, that nothing was left to move the Durbar except the human sacrifice known as "Johur." Four women presented themselves as victims, but at the last moment two became frightened and withdrew. No opposition being offered, the other two went bravely and willingly to meet death, and were burnt alive in the presence of the assembled community, their charred hands being afterwards curried by the villagers to Oodey-pore with a demand for redress. This occurred a few weeks ago, News has arrived from Manipore of the complete defeat of Chowba Singh, pretender to the throne. He at first succeeded in driving the Rajah's troops back to Manipore town, but fearing an attack in his rear by the British troops and frontier police, who were pursuing him, he took up a strong position on a hill there. He was attacked, and after two hours' fighting surrendered, no great loss being sustained on either side. He has been taken as a prisoner to Silchar.

BURMA.

RANGOON, Oct. 24.

The forces in Upper Burma, outside of the Chindwin Valley, are divided into six brigades, holding 78 posts. The strongest brigade is that at Mandalay, which numbers over 6,000 men. The 6th brigade, at Pagan, which has charge of the country ravaged by Boshway, is nearly 4,000 strong, and the weakest brigade is that at Bhamo. The Chindwin force under Colonel Toker, 900 strong, forms an independent command.

The Irrawaddy has fallen considerably and heavily.

Our scouts report that Boshway is at Napeh (25 miles to the west of Minbu), a fort in the Yomadung mountains. A large British force is now available at Minbu, and active operations with cavalry and mounted infantry will probably be immediately commenced against Boshway.

Prince Minoa, an Alompra Prince, who has set up as pretender since the Myentzein Prince's death, has reached the Shan country, and is supported by some minor Tsanbwas, near Karennee. Six of the most important Tsanbwas declared themselves friendly to the British. A Shan Tsanbwa who is now visiting Mandalay, advised the Government to construct a fort in the Netaik Pass, the chief route to the Shan territory. This Tsanbwa asserts that until lately the Shans had no sufficient or reasonable information as to the intentions of the British, and declares that the Shans will now accept the status effered them.

Several Tibetan traders have lately arrived here bringing chiefly wool. They state that they had great difficulty in obtaining passports from the Libassa Monks now staying at Garrinca, one march beyond the frontier, and from the Sikkim authorities at Chumbi, the summer residence of the Maharajah of Sikim in Tibet, and that they only got permission by representing that a refusal would mean starvation to themselves and their families. They confirm what I stated last week, that the opposition to Mr. Macaulay's mission is confined to the monks, and that the Tibetans generally are surprised and disappointed because it did not proceed. not proceed.

Official reports published by the Bengal Government show that in spite of the difficulties thrown in the way of trade with Sikkim and Tibet, it has trebled in the last two years.

"BEBANDOBASTNAGAR."

(Pioneer.)

No, gentle reader, it is of no use your asking me "Where is it?" Of no manner of use at all. "Wild 'orses shouldn't drag it out o' me; not if it were never so," and, setting aside the now obsolete expedient of "equine traction," I beg to assure you that all the powers of Venus and Bacchus, even when combined in their most seductive form say half-an-hour in darkest bales. that all the powers of Venus and Bacchus, even when combined in their most seductive form, say half-an-hour in darkest kalr jaga with the prettiest girl in Simla, after the absorption of three-quarters of a magnum of gelidus puer—"the iced boy" of the well known club band—are insufficient to extract from me the name, the presidency—nay, even the approximate latitude and longitude of "Bébandobastnagar." I am nothing if not a philanthropist, and I do but make my moan in the interests of suffering humanity, trusting that, perchance, some one or more of the beings responsible for a part or parts of our numerous grievances may thereby be moved to take steps for the amelioration of our wretched condition. I can vouch for the description I am about to give being a plain unvarnished statement of the actual existing state of affairs in the station referred to, and long the property of the part in any way an exaggerated or fancy sketch. If any gentleman chooses to fancy himself aggrieved by my plain speaking, let him reflect that he has placed the cap on his own head, and is alone responsible for its fit.

I must first apologise for the sesquipedalian nature of the pseudonym I have chosen as my heading; I only take it as being the one title that actually expresses the condition of affairs in our station.

As regards the place itself, there is but little to be said against it, and there are many points in its favour. The climate is better than that of ninety-nine stations out of a hundred in India. The cold is certainly excessive for a part of the winter; but the the cold is certainly excessive for a part of the winter; but the temperature is almost perfect in the spring, autumn, and during the first two months of the cold season, and the heat is at no time so great as to really necessitate the use of a punkah. Almost any English fruit or vegetable will grow, with a little care and cultivation, nearly as well as it does at home; the polonomy and will be a supported by the cold state of the polonomy and the cold state of the cold state and cultivation, nearly as well as it does at home; the pologround, cricket-ground and racecourse are all as near perfection as may be in this our land of exile. We have a large mixed garrison, and in short, to sum up in the words I have heard used fifty times in regard to the place: "There's the makings of a right good station." "And why," you ask, "is it not with all these advantages a good station?" Simply on account of lack of organisation, or, as our oriental friends express it, "bandobast." There seems to be want of order and arrangement in all our duties, our amusements and our general sur coundings, which is indigenous to the place, and for which no one seems to be able to account. Various suggestions have been made to explain this state of affairs. One of these is that we have all come here against our will with the intention—avowed or otherwise—of getting away, by hook or by crook, at the first or otherwise—of getting away, by hook or by crook, at the first available opportunity, and that it is not worth while bothering oneself about anything for the short time one is here. An alternative reason (suggested, it is needless to observe, by non-residents) is that our unfortunate state is a sort of penal settle-ment whither the inefficient, the untrustworthy, and the objectionable of the various departments are deported so as to get them out of the way, and that, such being the case, the existing state of disorganisation is inevitable. Although as a Bébandobastnagarian I protest as loudly as anyone against this solution of the problem, I am fain to confess that every new arrival—not a regimental officer—is at first regarded by the older inhabitants with a look which seems to say, "Now, what the deuce have you done to get sent here?" Whilst, as regards regiments, the following conversation, overheard a short time since in the club, was serve as an index of the require opinion as to the receipt following conversation, overneard a snort time since in the cito, may serve as an index of the popular opinion as to the reasons for their selection as a portion of our garrison.

Dr. Blather, log.: "Hullo, iphwat the devil have the Lea and they were a most respectable old corps."

Dr. B.: "Bedad, there's somethin' wrong wid 'em now annyways: they're undher ordhers for this blasted hole."

ways: they're undher ordhers for this blasted hole."

The chief objection at present entertained to the place is its unhealthiness—due almost entirely to want of "bandobast." The station is, unfortunately, situated in a slight hollow. The soil of this basin is said to be for the most part composed of the remains of defunct generations of human beings, camels and mules, supplemented by an admixture of decayed vegetable matter; the whole assimilated with a fine natural basis of mineral salts of a more or less aperient nature. The drinking water at present available for the use of the inhabitants is either procured from wells sunk in the aforesaid soil and contains Epsom salts, wells sunk in the aforesaid soil and contains Epsom salts, ammonia and other pleasing chemicals, or runs through Native villages and contains—God knows what! The adult male European drinks his peg or his beer, according to his station in life; the teetotalling Tommy gets his gingerade or lemonade cheap and excellent, prepared from properly purified water at the Royal Snokeshire Regimental machine; the mem sahib has her tea or her mill peg; the family cow or goat supplies the baba logue; and the British section of the community, so long as it keeps out of the sun during the heat of the day and wraps up when the sun goes down, keeps its health Bakhsh? Alas! poor fellows! they must either drink water or die. They do both. I have known sixty or seventy men admitted to hospital from one regiment in one morning, and the death-rate is almost incredible. And all for want of a little "bandobast." is almost incredible. And all for want of a little "bandobast." The judicious expenditure of a few thousand rupees would bring in an abundant supply of spring-water from a distance of a very few miles, and save hundreds of lives yearly. Our Brigadier, who is a kindly, genial soul, has repeatedly brought the matter to the notice of Government, and has been most vigorously supported by the local medical authorities, who have analysed the water and reported it as unfit for human consumption; but the example of Peshawar and Umballa is apparently thrown away and sanction is not forthcoming. Our only chance seems to be to get a teetotal bigwig belonging to the responsible department to come and spend a month with us, and then close the soda-water machine. I feel sure his sorrowing colleagues, after having interred him with due honours and erected a suitable monument, would feel moved to take some steps in the matter.

I have mentioned casually the inaccessibility of Bébandobastnagar. Now it sounds strange, but the station forms the junction of two railways, and is also connected with comparative civilization by an excellent tonga road. There are several Government tongas and several hundred mules, which never seem to be employed on any duty except that of furnishing private carriage for the Transport officer, and yet I do not think. I am exaggerating when I say that there is no station in India so difficult of access as this. There is no delay—presumably on account of the disinclination of Government to put its hand in its pockets—in the completion of one of the railways; on the other there is a break of gauge, and there are no passenger carriages. Every six inches of rain carries away about sixteen miles of railway. The head railway official in charge is most civil and obliging about granting passes, and, in fact, does all he can towards helping everyone who wishes to use his line; but the liability to accidents, the constant closing of the lines for two railways, and is also connected with comparative civilizabut the liability to accidents, the constant closing of the lines for repairs, and the fact that at every station on the way up the-guards, engine drivers, and stationmasters have an animated argument concerning the distribution of ten rupees unlawfully collected from non-regulation passengers, which proceeding, coupled with the delay occasioned by the guards and drivers partaking of refreshments and making friendly calls, necessitates an average stoppage of an hour and a half at each station, all mili-tate against one's enjoyment of the trip, causing one even to prefer-the homely camel (who does the entire distance in about the same the homely camel (who does the entire distance in about the same time, wants no refreshment, and is not liable to run off the road) as a means of conveyance. Of the Tonga service more anonunder the heading of "Transport." With regard to the garrison of Bébandobastnagar there seems to be the same want of arrangement as about everything else. We are at present in process of transferment from one Presidency to another. One of our two European regiments belongs to the Enlightened, the other to the Benighted Presidency. Both were khaki instead of white—the Lord and the General know why! The Enlightened Presidency regiment wears the Benighted Presidency uniform and Presidency regiment wears the Benighted Presidency uniform and vice versa. The Lord only knows the reason of this. It is beyond

To make matters still more complicated, the latt r officer, though admittedly on duty in the aforestid sanitarium, is not permitted to command it, notwithstanding the fact that he is the senior officer doing duty therein.

Our two Native Infantry regiments are for the most part scattered about in small detachments as escorts to working parties on the roads and railways. The remainder spend their time either on guard or in hospital—the latter for choice.

BURMA AFTER THE CONQUEST. (Bombay Gazette.)

The Times' correspondent at Rangoon is a well-meaning manand he has done valuable public service during his mission in Burma, notably in bringing into strong light the inexcusable purpose to which the Provost Marshal at Mandalay turned his camera during some military executions at the beginning of the year. But he is not always wise in the way in which he endeavours to give effect to his impulses, and he is an informant whose testimony the public may do well to regard as honest, though not always accurate. It is not a serious injustice that he has done to a fellow-chronicler of events in Burma by citing Mr. Geary's "Burma After the Conquest" as the testimony of an eye-witness to "a system of almost indiscriminate executions" which commenced after the fall of Mandalay. But he has been guilty of an inaccurate citation, which has brought down upon the author of the work the animadversions of Mr. Holt Hallett, the author of the work the animadversions of Mr. Holt Hallett, who devotes a couple of columns in the Times to answering the Times' correspondent upon many points, and to proving that Mr. Geary's evidence in support of the correspondent's indictment is weak and inconclusive. The most noteworthy thing in this criticism of "Burma After the Conquest" is that it should have come from Mr. Holt Hallett. It is an easy thing for him to endeavour to discredit Mr. Geary as a witness by saying that "Mr. Geary left Bombay on December 7th, 1885, arrived in Mandalay on December 21st, left it on December 28th, and dates the preface of his book Bombay. February 26th, 1886. His stay in Upper of his book Bombay, February 26th, 1886. His stay in Upper Burma was, therefore, exceedingly brief." The itinerary, so far as we know, is correct enough, and we are only sorry that we cannot give a pendent to it in an itinerary of Mr. Holt Hallett's journey from Mandalay to England. But so far as we remember. Mr. Holt Hallett must have left Burma at least a year before Mr. Geary, for he passed through Bombay for England, if we mistake not, in February or March, 1885, and since then he was too busily engaged in promoting a somewhat visionary Burmese railway enterprise before reluctant Chambers of Commerco in England to have acquired any direct knowledge of what was going on in Burma. As in this matter Mr. Holt Hallett intervenes as an expert, and claims credence as such, it is necessary to point out that however wide his acquaintance with "Burma before the Conquest" may have been, "Burma after the Conquest" is to him a terra incognita, in which he has not had even a brief stay.

Mr. Holt Hallett, however, has evidently read with some care the book to which the Times' correspondent appealed when condemning the system of almost indiscriminate executions. The demning the system of almost indiscriminate executions. The pity is, therefore, that his examination was not careful enough to inform him that Mr. Geary in no wise goes into the witness-box as a spectator of all the events which he narrates. That is the error of the Times' correspondent, and Mr. Holt Hallett, who is a shrewd man, might easily have known this, and have spared himself the task of trying to disprove allegations which had never been made. "Burma after the Conquest," so far as the enjayles in question are concerned in the work not never been made. "Burma after the Conquest," so far as the episodes in question are concerned, is the work not of a spectator but of an historian, but with this advantage over most histories that it was written while the memory of eye-witnesses was fresh, while the smoke of burning villages still hung lazily over the landscape, and while material for the history still lay upon the ground waiting to be gathered up by the first industrious comer. Mr. Holt Hallett, having liberally quested from the history has no stronger refutetion for liberally quoted from the history, has no stronger refutation for it than doubts of his own which arise in the foggy seclusion of Old-square, Lincoln's Inn. May not the rumours credited by Mr. Geary, he asks—Mr. Geary, by the way, credits no rumours, though he narrates incidents circumstantially detailed to him by people on the spot—have been baseless? To a critic living in Lincoln's Inn, who has no more direct knowledge of the affairs of the New Burma than he has of the affairs of the Old Saturn, any record, no matter how carefully it may have been prepared, may seem imaginary if he chooses that it shall so seem. But Mr. Holt Hallett's hypothetical negations will not go far—not much farther, for instance, than those indiscretions of the Times' correspondent wnich rightly vex his soul, and which have given so much trouble to Sir John Gorst, but which are easily disposed of by anyone armed with due knowledge of men, instructions, and events under the new regime in Upper Burma.

THE HILL MIGRATION. (Times of India.)

In Bombay the question of the official migration to the hills is a purely impersonal one. There are so many interests in our city that the presence or absence of the Governor, and the small knot of officials who travel about with him, are scarcely noted even by the tradespeople. Society used, perhaps, to be a trifle duller when its natural head was away. But society took the bull by the horns, and the Bombay Yacht Club is now a capital substitute for Government House. If the citizens of Calcutta. and Madras would only follow the example of Bombay, we should hear a good deal less of the depression of trade caused by the habitual desertion of their Government Houses. It is, of course, an anomalous state of things, especially in regard to the local Governments, who, unlike the Government of India, are essentially employed in direct administration. The choice of Ootacamund for the greater part of the year by the Madras Government will, unless it is stopped, seriously injure the Presidency town. "It is," as our correspondent "Spectator" argued a short time back, "as little to be justified as would be the prolonged residence of is," as our correspondent "Spectator" argued a snort time back, "as little to be justified as would be the prolonged residence of the Punjab Governor at Simla or the Allahabad Governor at Naini [Tal." But the Government of India are in a totally "" An English statesman of ripe experience is Naini [Tal." But the Government of India are in a totally different position. An English statesman of ripe experience is required for the head of the Indian administration, and if the required for the head of the Indian administration, and it the British statesman of ripe experience will not run the risk of a fixed residence in Calcutta, "the mountain of administration," to quote "Spectator" again, "must go to Mahomed." And then, as he continues, "the public buildings at Simla proclaim above the tops of the deodars j'y suis, j'y reste." A certain amount of "touch" with the European community is undoubtedly lost at Simla. Lord Ripon, for instance, had not the slightest idea of the feeling against the Ilbert Bill until his return to Calcutta warned him that it was time to withdraw the bill. Many months were thus wested in a fruitless struggle. According to a writer were thus wasted in a fruitless struggle. According to a writer in the current number of the Calcutta Review, the "weakest thing: Lord Ripon ever said was, that if he had known the depth of the hostility to the bill, he would not have persevered with it. The only answer is that everyone in Simla but the Viceroy knew it, and he also had the most perfect means of knowing." But this was at all events a very exceptional instance, and we are inclined. to agree with the same writer that it is not too much to say that there is hardly a subject of Imperial interest in Bengal that is not more fully understood in Simla than in Calcutta. It is the Viceroy's chief business to look after the interests of the two-hund.ed and fifty millions of the Queen's Native subjects in. India, to regulate the relations of the Native princes to the State and to each other, and to watch with a jealous eye the attempts of neighbouring Powers to encroach upon our borders. It is hard to say that all this cannot be accomplished as efficiently at Simla as in Calcutta.

At any rate, we have to deal with actual facts, and we know from the files of the latest home papers, and on the authority of the Under-Secretary of State for India, that the question of restoring the seat of Government to Calcutta has never even been considered. Sir J. Gorst made this statement on the expression of the subject. view of allaying all possible apprehensions on the subject. Government are there and they will remain there, and public agitation should be directed rather towards the reduction in the extra expenditure entailed by their Capuan residence. Here the despatches themselves are useful finger-posts, inasmuch as their despatches themselves are useful finger-posts, masmuch as their inditers try to explain away the heavy personal travelling charges. Why not explain them away in reality as well as on paper by abolishing them altogether? The fortunate officials, who go to Simla, enjoy the double benefits of Indian pay and an English climate. Indian incomes were framed on a liberal scale as a set-off against the many drawbacks of an Indian climate. But the people who go to Simla have no need of the good old-fashioned two years' furlough, which was invented when the furlough, which was invented when the fashioned two years' furlough, which was invented when the voyage to England and back occupied something like a twelvemonth. They have not to provide two homes, for their wives (and incidentally their children) prefer the amusements of a Simla season to a dull existence in Bayswater, Bath, or Cheltenham. They are simply able to pocket the difference between Indian and English pay, and this more than anything else has caused the present irritation, so far as Simla alone is concerned. It would be too much to expect the leading administrators as I would be too much to expect the leading administrators as for as dock their own salaries. Human nature can hardly go as far as that. But the Finance Committee might very well recommend that all officials drawing over a certain minimum amount of salary should be required to pay their own travelling charges as an analysis of the commendation of the salary case that the salary case the salary case. acknowledgment of the advantages they gain in a prolonged residence in the Himalayas over their les fortunate brethren in the scorching plains below. Sir Philip Wodehouse made it a rule to defray the cost of his visit to Mahableshwur, and the rule might be extended to all who accompany a Governor-General or a Governor to Simla or any of the other hill stations. This is a very fair subject for the Finance Committee, and though the movements of the Government of India may be beyond their ken, movements of the Government of India may be beyond their ken, they might also have something to say about the costly migrations of the Local Governments. We can, as we have said, afford to speak impartially in Bombay. It is quite right that our Governor should spend a portion of his time in the Muhratta capital, and nobody grudges him his visits to Mahableswhur in the spring and autumn. But the continued residence of the Governor of Madras at Ootacamund puts the whole Madras Presidency out of joint. It is hardly too much to say that the "Madras Scandals" have been at the bottom of this last general outcry against all official migration to the hills. In Bombay, at all events, we are quite prepared to accept the existing arrange-ments at Siml, but they have been parodied in Madras to an extent that seems to render direct administration almost impos-

SIR CHARLES AITCHISON.

(Pioneer.)

Lord Dufferin is "devilish sly." It appears that this appointment of Sir Charles Aitchison to succeed Sir Steu Bayley in the Executive Council was practically settled in June last. Yet no hint of it was breathed abroad. In the public view Sir Charles Aitchison was never in the running, because it was generally known, that above all things, he sought retirement and rest. And it is probable that he has only consented to the arrangement from a sense of duty and after having urged with characteristic sincerity all that might be said against it. He was not popular: he would be standing in the way of younger men; two years of Burma and the cares of a Lieutenant-Governorship had sapped his powers for work—these and such as these would be his objections. Sir Charles Aitchison's unpopularity in the Punjab shall be admitted. It may be stated as a general proposition that members of the Indian Civil Service do not love each other. In the Punjab, though Conservative by profession, they are Radical in their hunger for the best appointments and in their dislike of those who obtain them. And its Lieutenant Governor has, no doubt, rammed certain round men into square holes with reckless integrity of purpose. His colleague in the North-West, however, is far more unpopular, for different reasons; yet it would be wrong to say either that he has failed as a Lieutenant-Governor or would fail in Council. As for Sir Charles Aitchison's younger competitors, the few there are can afford to bide their time. His duties in Council will be far less exacting than those of a Lieutenant Governor, and, all said, perhaps better suited to him. He has never taken kindly to the inevitable sham of State; he is an indifferent judge of his fellows. We hold that the man who would rule men successfully must himself be something of a rogue—here Sir Charles Aitchison fails. Again, at the threshold of Indian administration lies a political paradox which he is constitutionally unfitted to grasp. It is that the thing which is theoretically right is in practice often dangerous and wrong. During the earlier part of his career as Lieutenant-Governor Sir Charles Aitchison was more than once rudely reminded of this when taken captive of some undisciplined enthusiasm for reform. In a word, he has the defects of his virtues. Call them vices even, they are grand ones, such as the methods of the Executive Council will go far to counteract, leaving it altogether the gainer by the application of his great natural sagacity; in the fruits of his long and various experience; in the loyalty, the courage, the disinterestedness, which are the inhorn attributes of the man. It is the recognition which are the inborn attributes of the man. It is the recognition of these qualities in his future colleague which, no doubt, swayed a selection on the Viceroy's part which does him honour. Moreover, the selection establishes a new and much needed departure in the order of preferment. The old one was a strain on the humanness of any man who might be tempted to trim his sails for the pleasant haven of a Licutenant-Governorship.

BENGAL.

MR. TRAILL's case has been before the Officiating Presidency Magistrate again. The informer, under cross-examination, adhered steadily to his story that he saw Mr. Traill strike the deceased on the right side just before he fell. Another duftry gave evidence similar to that which he gave in the police court, that he saw a European Assistant go to the deceased and return that he saw a European Assistant go to the deceased and return in anger to his seat near Mr. Traill, because the deceased had declined to undertake at once some work he had asked him to do. Directly afterwards he saw Mr. Traili walk over to the deceased and strike him on the right side, when the man immediately fell off the stool on to the tioor, struggling with his hands and feet in the air. He did not say anything about the assault till some days afterwards, when the deceased's father-in-law asked him if he had seen a blow struck, and then he told what he had seen. In cross-examination the witness denied having been paid Rs. 30 to give evidence at the Coroner's court and before the Magistrate. He was subpossed to attend both Courts. The case was adjourned.

"BRITANNIOUS," writing in the Indian Planters' Gazette on the Gibbons case, says:—"The following facts will show the perfunctory way in which some Government Inspectors perform their duty. I have now before me three registered contracts under section III. of Act I. of 1882, and I am informed that when, for the first time after registration thereof, the Inspector visited the garden, the labourers, whose mark and signatures respectively are affixed thereto, appeared before him and did not deny the said mark and signatures to be theirs respectively. No certificate, however, of the said contracts having been explained to the coolies by the Inspector, in accordance with the law, is endorsed upon anyone of those contracts. Upon one of them, indeed, the word 'verified' with the Inspector's signature and a date is endorsed, but what specific meaning is conveyed by the word 'verified' is a conundrum which I am is a conundrum which I am veyed by the word 'verified' is a conundrum which I am unable to guess, because the Act does not define or provide for any such endorsement. What wonder is it, then, if such laxity on the part of Inspectors engenders laxity on the part of managers without any intention to contravene any law regarding cooly contracts? But suddenly, as in the present case, some I spector, wishing to acquire a name for zeal, rouses himself, and, upon the principle, described in Hudibras, of 'compounding for sins' (of laxity) 'he is inclined to try by damning those he has no mind to,' pounces upon some unfortunate manager, and prosecutes him to the bitter end for a sin of laxity, which the laxity of himself and his fallow importants has a property. which the laxity of himself and his fellow-inspectors has engendered. Now if this was a game at which the two could play on equal terms, it would not be so glaringly objectionable as it undoubtedly is, but since the game which Government allows and encourages Inspectors to play with tea-planters is of the nature of the games of 'heads I win, tails you lose,' which is not considered to be a fair game by honourable men, the sooner Government, for its own honour, alters all this the better.

THE Englishman says that it is now said that the passing of the Ghee Act has had a result that was not anticipated. In many places the respectable dea'ers in ghee have ceased to manufacture it, apprehensive of trouble under the new legislation. If this is true to any large extent, the Act, by diminishing the supply of pure ghee, will have the very opposite effect to that intended. Meantime, there can be no doubt that the practical effect of the measure is to place ghee completely beyond the reach of the poorer classes. The immediate result is to raise the price of poorer classes. The immediate result is to raise the price of ghee to the poor exactly one and a-quarter times. This means that to the great mass of the people ghee is practically a thing of the past.

MADRAS.

Ir has been settled (says the Pioneer) that Sir Grant Duff leaves Madras for Europe on the 25th of November, whilst the Hon. R. Bourke dees not arrive until the 6th of December. During the interval Mr. Sullivan, as Senior Member of Council, must, in the ordinary course, act as Governor. It may be concluded that he will instal his cousin and satellite, the redoubtable Mr. Thomas, as Member of Council, and his fellow-conspirator, Mr. Garstin, as Chief Secretary. Oh, Lord! How long?

THE Finance Committee have been engaged since their arrival in inquiries into provincial expenditure, and have been in conference with the heads of the following departments:—Public Works, Police, Education, Settlement, Survey, Registration, Forests, Salt and Excise, and with the Registrars of the High Court and some of the Court and some of th Court and some of the Government Law Officers. The Committee have postponed their inquiries into military matters for the prcsent, in order to dispose of the questions connected with provincial expenditure first.

MR. REES has been appointed to the office of Private Secretary to the Right Hon. Mr. Bourke. Mr. Rees is a great linguist. It is sixteen years since a member of the Madras Civil Service has been appointed to this post.

THE EARL OF ROSEBERY, on arrival in India, is expected to visit the Kolar Gold Field in the company of S.r Charles Tennant, Bart., the chairman of the Mysore Gold Mining Company.

A MEETING of the "Society for the Propagation of True Religion," a Hindoo association, is advertised to be held at Madras. The venerable S.P.G. should resent this colourable imitation of its name.

SIR M. E. GRANT DUFF telegraphed to Colombo that he would rather see Kandy than be entertained by the grandest dinner or the most splendid ball, as had been originally intended. The ball, therefore, was put off, and Sir Arthur and Lady Gordon took Sir M. E. and Lady Grant Duff up to Kandy by special train, staying there one night, and returning on the morning of the 25th ult. to Colombo.

Sir M. E. Grant Duff entertains a high opinion of the Jesuits. Replying to an address presented to him by the students of St. John's College, Trichinopoly, on the occasion of his visit on the 20th ultimo, his Excellency, after thanking the addressees, said:—'I wish further to make only one observation and to express one hope. The observation is this. Taking what you have said about my interest in the scheme for developing to greater extension of in lustrial education in this Presidency, I see all that fine test which has always characterised this great order, and lead it to perceive the right thing at the right moment when it is to be done; a tact which has caused it to take the great place which it occupies in the modern history of education. The wish which I desire to express is this: that each of your pupils, when he leaves this great seminary of learning, may leave with feelings akin to those expressed so finely by the great Gressée, author of a 'Vort Vert.' I do not know that his lines about the Jesuits under whom he as not know that his lines about the Jesuits under whom he was brought up are known as well as they ought to be known. They are, in my judgment, the most touching and the most beautiful lines in French poetry, and they deserve to be written in letters of generous gold in every educational institution of the Jesuits in the world."

BOMBAY.

THE season reports of the Bombay Presidency for the week ending the 28th ult. show that there was slight rain in the districts of the Central and Southern Divisions, but none in Gujarat. More rain is urgently wanted almost everywhere. The standing crops are still in good condition generally, but in some districts the crops are withering from want of rain.

It is stated that a Syndicate has been formed for the purpose of constructing a steam tramway in Hyderabad, and that the Nizam will shortly be asked to grant the usual concessions, subject to the conditions of his agreement with the new railway company.

A VERY sad accident occurred on the railway on the evening of the 25th Sept. A trolly containing Mr. G. H. Erskine, Mr. T. White, and Mr. Wasey ran into a truck in the dark. The draw-hook tore right through Mr. Erskine's leg, and he succumbed on the morning of the 26th. Mr. White received some slight contusions to his face and legs, and is doing well. Mr. Wasey escaped unhurt.

WE sometimes receive curious productions from Native correspondents. Here, for instance, is a curious communication from Hyderabad, apparently from a Native Christian missionary:—
"A man, by name Heerajce, has lately come to Hyderabad, leaving his Native land and property, possessed with a strange notion. He is in perplexity of mind to find a way for the remission of his sins, and after all he has come to a final decision, and determined thus:—That on the Judgment Day the most Gracious Queen-Empress of India and the Nizam of Hyderabad will appear before the Tribunal Judge, Jesus Christ. At the same time he will strive to get the water with which these monarchs have cleaned their feet and will drink it, and he believes that when he has done so his sins will be forgiven. He is desirous that this message should reach the ears of these monarchs, for which purpose he is willing to exhaust all his time and money. Under these above stated events the editor may consider over and extract his main object and use necessary exertions to prevent him from his foolish idea. It appears that his Guru (spiritual adviser), by name Thooba Ram Sadoo, has put this imaginary and strong idea into his brain."

A BOMBAY Native paper reminds us that when Lord Dalhousie WE sometimes receive curious productions from Native cor-

A BOMBAY Native paper reminds us that when Lord Dalhousie A BOMBAY Native paper reminds us that when Lord Dalhousie was on his annual tour, his travelling camp consisted of the following:—"Elephants, 135; camels, 1,060; bullocks, 700; and Government tent, 488. Exclusive of the escort, the establishment amounted to 6,000, not counting the private servants and followers. This camp in motion covered sometimes six miles of ground, and if we take the lagging of overladen animals the measurement would be about half as much again. Were there any Chambers of Commerce or Trade Associations or patriotic any Chambers of Commerce or Trade Associations or patriotic editors in Calcutta in those days?"

Business during the past week in Bombay has been extremely dull, both in imports and exports, and although the monsoon as regards rain may be considered over, yet as far as business is concerned we might still be in the middle of it. The Home markets for produce seem lifeless, especially for seeds and wheat. Receipts of all produce into Bombay are showing a falling-off now, but this probably is as much due to the want of a good market here as to diminished supplies up-country. The Freight market has collapsed, and even at 18s. 9d. there is little or no demand. Owners are not forcing their steamers on the market, hoping that shippers will be obliged to come to their terms presently. Money is rather dearer than it was.

OBITUARY.

SIR HERBERT MACPHERSON.

Sir Herbert Taylor Macpherson, K.C.B., was the youngest son of the late Lieutenant-Colonel Duncan Macpherson, 78th Highlanders, of Ardersier, Inverness-shire. He was born in 1827, entered the Army in 1845, was made captain in 1857, brevet-major in 1858, major in 1865, brevet lieutenant-colonel in 1867, lieutenant-colonel in 1871, brevet colonel in 1872, and major-general in 1882. He served in the Persian War in 1857 as adjutant of the 78th Highlanders, including the expedition to Barazoom, the night attack, and battle of Kooshab, the bombardment of Mohumrah, for which he received the medal with clasp. With Sir Henry Havelock's column he served in Bengal, and was also present in the actions of Onao, at which he was wounded, at Buseerutgunge (first and second), Boorbakechowkee, and Bithoor, and in the several actions leading to and ending in the brilliant relief of the Residency of Lucknow and subsequent defence, at which he was wounded, and received the Victoria Cross for his conspicuous and gallant conduct. He served in the Afghanwar of 1878.9, in command of the first brigade of the first-division of the Kyber column. For his services on that occasion he was rewarded with the medal with clasp and made a Knight-Commander of the Bath. He served in the Egyptian War of Commander of the Bath. He served in the Egyptian War of 1882, in command of the Indian division, and was present at the battle of Tel-el-Kebir. He was in August last Commander in Chief of the Madras Army, and after the failure of the first military expedition to Burma toafter the failure of the first military expedition to Burma, toaccomplish the pacification and settlement of that country, towas instructed to transfer his headquarters temporarily to Burma, and to remain there until the conclusion of the operations in the

everybody admitted that the best selection had been made, and everybody admitted that the best selection had been made, and the more serious complications which arose in Upper Burma during the present spring and summer were considered likely to provide. Sir Herbert Macpherson with an opportunity of showing how competent he was to conduct military operations on a large scale. This appointment was notified to the Home Government on 13th August last, and Sir Herbert Macpherson immediately proceeded for the scene of the operations up the Irrawaddy with the reinforcements. He arrived at Rangoon on 9th September, and assumed supreme command on that date of the expedition. He there took leave of Sir Charles Bernard, the Chief Commissioner of British Burma, and at once proceeded up the river, taking of British Burma, and at once proceeded up the river, taking with him a formidable flotilla of river boats, which carried the reinforcements which had accompanied him from India. He reached Yenangang on 14th September, and, after making a brief stay Yenangang on 14th September, and, after making a brief stay there and at Prome, he reached Mandalay on the 17th. The inundations which occurred there soon afterwards appear to have been the cause of much unhealthiness among the Natives and the British troops. General Macpherson meditated early in October British troops. General Macpherson meditated early in October a visit to Bhamo, higher up the river, with Brigadier Ellis, Adjutant-General, but apparently this expedition was not carried out, for despatches were received at the India Office, dated Mandalay, 12th October, and immediately after that date he descended the river to Thayetmyo, where he received reports as to the condition of the country. He appears to have contracted the fever there, which necessitated his removal back to Rangoon, and helphad evidently started on the journey by steamer on Tuesday, and had reached as far as Prome, when he became worse, and died. Sir Herbert Macpherson married, in 1859, Maria, daughter died. Sir Herbert Macpherson married, in 1859, Maria, daughter of Lieutenant-General James Eckford, C.B.

He entered the Army as an ensign in August 1855, obtaining his lieutenancy in April 1865, majority in July, 1872, lieutenant-colonelcy in December 1878, and his colonelcy in December 1882. He served in the Indian Mutiny Campaign in 1858, and was present at the assault of Kotah, and in the engagements with the Gwalior mutineers between Sanganeer and Bheelwarra, and at Kothari, receiving the medal awarded.

THE STANDARD ASSURANCE COMPANY.

TO THE EDITOR.

-I have read with much interest your leading article

SIB,—I have read with much interest your leading article regarding the action of the Standard Company; also the extracts from the letter which you have received from the Company.

But I do not altogether understand the allusion made to the "Indian question" in the last paragraph of the letter.

The Head Secretary states that "the Indian question has not yet come before the Board, but it may very possibly be settled on the same lines as the question in Ceylon."

I would ask the Company to state distinctly, and without reference to Ceylon, what the old Indian policy-holders have to expect—whether their policies, declared as they are, in precise terms, to be payable in rupees in India, or at the office in London, "in sterling money, at the rate of two shillings per Company's rupee," will, together with their accumulated bonuses, be so paid in sterling money at par if demanded?

As to the "intemperate language" used by some of those who have written on the subject, allowance must be made for the alarm felt by men who know that their families may at any moment be left in their helplessness, and in, probably, straitened circumstances, to contend at law with a powerful Company for payment of what they have hitherto, and for many years, believed to be their just wights. to be their just rights.

I append another short extract from an issue of the Madras-Mail, by which it will be seen that the "Indian question" is likely to be at once brought to the arbitrament of the law, so far as regards the rights of the executors of policy-holders dying in India (and, à fortiori, of those dying in England):—

"A gentleman assured under a 'Standard' Policy issued in India, which provided for payment of 'Rs. 10,000 to be paid at the office of the Company in Madras, or at the office of the Company in Indian in starling managers the rate of two shillings. pany in London, in sterling money at the office of the Company in London, in sterling money at the rate of two shillings per rupee, lately died in this Presidency, and the Company insist that they have the option (which they intend to exercise) of paying the claim, including bonuses, in rupees in Madras, and assert that the executor of the assured, who claims to be paid in sterling at par in London, has no option at all in the matter. The Company's contention seems to be that the reliev is to be read Sterling at par in London, has no option at all in the matter. The Company's contention seems to be, that the policy is to be read with the addition of the words, 'at the option of the Company,' in the payment clause, although, in fact, no such words occur. An action is about to be brought on the policy in England against the Company, to recover the amount of the claim in sterling at par, which will settle the question raised."

MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

A COMMITTEE, composed of Colonel Craster, R.A. (President), Cuptain Maunsell, Army Pay Department, and Captain Sandbach, R.A., has been ordered to assemble at Allahabad to further investigate and report upon the accounts of E-4 Battery.

THE officers of the Indian Medical Service are to be instructed The officers of the Indian Medical Service are to be instructed in ambulance drill, for which purpose the provisions of Section XIV. (Paragraphs 80-90)) of the Queen's Regulations, 1885, will be made applicable to India, and War Office pattern stretchers provided for the purpose of carrying out the drill, no other patterns being used. The patterns of War office stretchers will, in the first place, be obtained from England, and any further supplies necessary will be made up locally according to those patterns. Classes for ambulance instruction are to be formed at all stations which are occupied by British and Native troops, excluding small outlying detachments, and will be composed and only of officers of the Indian Medical Service, but also of uncidical subordinates of both classes of two men per company, ancdical subordinates of both classes of two men per company, troop or battery of the Corps at the station, and of any other cfficers and men who may voluntarily seek instruction, and of the permanent establishment of dooly bearers. At all stations where British troops are located, the instructor will be selected from the Medical Saff. Medical officers of the Indian Medical Service will first be trained in ambulance drill to fit them for instructing Native troops.

THE two new Mountain Batteries about to be raised will be commanded by Captain C. P. Triscott and Captain E. A. Smith.

The unequal distribution of paid appointments between officers of the Medical Staff and of the Indian Medical Service, having been brought to the notice of the Government of India, the Viceroy has desired Local Governments to consider the fair claim of the two services in making appointments to lock hospitals, and suggests that at stations where the Staff Surgeoncy is held by an officer of the Medical Staff, the medical charge of the lock hospital be given to an officer of the Indian Medical Service and vice versa, and considers that in this a more equitable allotment of these appointments than exists at present may be secured. It is hoped that this order will allay whatever irritation exists at the present time against the Medical Staff, and that the even distribution in future of paid appointments between the two services will entirely eradicate it.

LIEUT. COLONEL Cox, who arrived in Madras last week from Burma with the intention of proceeding to Europe on the recommendation of his medical attendant, has been peremptorily ordered by the General Officer commanding at Mandalay not to leave Madras—as he left Nyingyan without intimating to the General Officer commanding his departure from the latter station, and without having forwarded his medical certificate. and without having forwarded his medical certificate; all acts centrary to the Queen's Regulations-till such time as a medical certificate is received by the Adjutant of the Somersetshire Light Infantry.

THE Government of India have applied the Bengal Barrack Regulations to the whole of the British troops in the Quetta District. Henceforward their establishments will be maintained in accordance with those regulations.

A REST House has been opened at Rangoon for the convenience of officers passing through that station. Officers desiring accommodation therein are to apply to the Assistant Quarter-master-General, Burma Division.

LIEUTENANT-Colonel F. W. CHATTERTON has been appointed efficiating commandant of the Calcutta Volunteers.

THE new uniform of the Calcutta Volunteers, as settled by the repecial Dress Committee, will, it is stated, be identical with that of the Bombay Volunteers, so far as the coat is conceined—scallet with dark blue facings and white trimming. The trousers of the rank and file, it stead of having down the side the broad white stripe of the Bombay Volunteers, will have white piping only. The trousers of the officers will have a 1½ inch stripe of silver lace, and the officers' tunics will be trimmed with silver lace instead of white cord.

It is stated that the Government is willing to help to build suitable headquarters for the Calcutta Volunteer Corps, and is prepared to advance Rs. 31,000 for this purpose, repayable in ten ears, without interest.

As the revised Volunteer Regulations do not allow of members of the police holding any position in a Volunteer Corps other than "private" or "honorary," the non-commissioned officers of long standing in the Calcutta Volunteer Rifles have been called upon to resign their rank.

NOTICES BOOKS. OF

THE TOUCHSTONE OF PERIL.*

There are not wanting people who proclaim, and it must be admitted without apparent cause, that the English nation has sadly deteriorated, that the pluck and determination which for centuries have characterised the Anglo-Saxon race have given way to indolence, ease, and self-indulgence. In these circumstances Mr. Thomas has done well to direct public attention once again to one of the most stirring periods of Great Britain's history—a period when the sterling qualities of her children stood forth with a prominence which has never been surpassed since this island first began to assume sway and power. surpassed since this island first began to assume sway and power. The Mutiny of 1857-1858 (which, by the way, by a singular oversight our author has made to commence in May, 1858), with all its horrors, its murders, its scenes of bloodshed, its episodes of failure and death, its dreams of victory, and—alas! for the weakness of human nature—of revenge, is a chapter in the annals of the nation of which the latter may well be proud. Courage, endurance, heroism, perseverance, pluck, determination, these are the qualities which saved India. Let us hope they will yet enable old England to maintain a foremost place in the ranks of civilisation and enterprise. of civilisation and enterprise.

The "Touchstone of Peril" is therefore welcome. It touches a sympathetic chord in the national breast, and, while affording an insight into the ways and doings of Anglo-Indian society, it thrills the reader as it recalls the terrible episodes of that memorable revolt.

There are, too, some fine characters. Foremost amongst the number may, perhaps, be placed the old Colonel of a Native Regiment, bred and born in the midst of the soldiers; speaking Regiment, bred and born in the midst of the soldiers; speaking their language, like one of the Sepoys themselves. Knowing the men, and acquainted with their feelings, their wants, their aspirations, loving and loved, he could not bring himself to believe that. "his boys" would be faithless to their salt. So when the storm-cloud of mutiny burst upon the Station of Hajigunge he appeared, as usual, on parade, and addressed his men in language of firm and confident expostulation; but a bullet, which pierced his heart, was the response of men who one many a field had followed him to victory, of men who once had thought it an honour and a pride to serve under the banner of the "Kumpani Bahadur." Then there is the old Subahdar-Major, Bhola Misr, the senior Native officer of the Regiment. A peasant by birth he had risen from the ranks, and for forty years had eaten the the senior Native on the reaks, and for forty years had eaten the salt of fidelity. Straightforward, loyal, he pessessed a firm belief in the "iqbal" (good fortune) of the English Rule; he would never smite the hand which had given him food, raiment, station and home; but the conspirators were cunning as well as disbulied. They approached the father through the son the diabolical. They approached the father through the son—the latter, a disorderly, cross-grained, ill—conditioned specimen of humanity. So with his tongue the old warrior swore by the Sacred Waters of the Ganges that he would lend a helping hand to overthrow the "Raj," which for ten centuries had bestowed security and order upon the country which had nou-rished him, and which was shortly about to give him in retire-ment the means of living in comfort if not affluence; but his heart never wavered, and when the outbreak occurred, and the Europeans of Hajigunge were fighting for dear life within the walls of an indigo factory, whither they had all betaken them-selves, Bhola Misr found means to join the party. Nor did he lose his reward, for when victory again raised her standard over the fair plains of fiery Hindustan, Government, ever ready to reward fair plains of hery Hindustan, Government, ever ready to reward good service, not only bestowed upon the faithful Sepoy the coveted litle of "Bahadur," but added to the honour the mere substantial boon of an estate which included the village where, in times gone by, he had begun life as a humble ploughboy.

reliant in danger, modest, thoughtful, considerate, they are typical of the highest class of England's daughters; and the reader finds a relief in the end to learn that, amidst slaughter and destruction, they at least escape safe and uninjured to rise to high station in life—respected, beloved, aye, envied. Nor must a word of praise be omitted to their parents—the father, blunt, austere, hot-tempered, but, withal, honest and upright; the mother, timid, melancholy, and despondent in times of security; but when surrounded by danger then her better nature asserted its rights, and during the stirring and critical time of the siege none was a greater source of comfort and consolation than poor misunderstood, misconstrued, Nancy Neale.

Dismissing with scorn and contempt the wife of the Collector of the District, a woman of inferior birth, who had used matrimony as a means to raise herself in the social circle, and to enrich an impoverished exchequer, she deserves the castigation of oblivion. Far otherwise is the case with the faithful widow of the bandmaster. Bereft of her two children, the loved ones of her home, the loyal half-caste threw the energies of her soul into the scale with those she had learned to respect. Like a tigress at bay, bereft of her cubs, her eyes flashed the fire of determination, and it was a proud moment when she was enabled to hide all the females of the Station in an outhouse, and by effrontery and boldness to save them alive from the hands of those who would have insulted their honour and polluted their existence; who, too, in the end would have spilt their blood like water upon the earth. Aye! honest Mrs. Graham is a type of fidelity of which the Mutiny could hoast of not a few specimens—humble, fervent, undaunted. Many an English family to this day has learned to bless the lowly means which Providence used in carrying them through a crisis the remembrance of which blanches the cheek with fear, and reddens it with pride.

We have reserved for the las: the heroes of the story-We have reserved for the last the heroes of the story—Dacres and Steele—the former a handsome, merry, blithe companion of the hour. The life and soul of the garrison—popular, fascinating, and a favourite alike with the men as well as with the fairer portion of the Station—none would suppose that at the time of trial he would be found wanting. But so it was; and till the experiences of that fearful episode had taught him to eschew self and think of others, then, and not till then, did the noble traits of a noble character assert their claims to recognition. Far otherwise was the case with Steele. Thoughtful, reserved, careful in money matters to a degree that laid him open to the imputation of meanness, he was as unpopular as was his rival the reverse. Being senior officer of the two, of necessity he was "put up with" on many occasions when it would have been impossible to have omitted him from the party; but when the time of danger arrived then he was seen in his true colours—then he was found calm, collected, brave as a lion, gentle as a dove; and when he emerged from the vortex of war entitled to add to his name the coveted distinction of V.C. who does not rejoice? But when the reader is further informed, at the closing pages of the volume, that Captain Steele was the support of a widowed mother and two orphan sisters, who does not feel proud that England can and does produce such sons? of others, then, and not till then, did the noble traits of a noble duce such sons?

We have all along written of Mr. Thomas's tale as if it were true. We believe this to be the case. At least, in one instance, we can trace the thread of real life, and we trust we are justified in assuming that it is only as regards names that there has been any material departure from the facts of the time. The "Touchstone of Peril" will, we venture to think, be read with pleasure any material departure from the facts of the time. The "Touchstone of Peril" will, we venture to think, be read with pleasure and interest alike by Indian Society, who can appreciate a tale descriptive of scenes which are fresh in the memory of those who took part in the eventful episodes of 1857, as by the general public, who can appreciate a charming novel which dwells upon the characteristics of our nation, which all can esteem and none can despise

ROBINSON CRUSOE AND HOME SUNBEAMS.*

The Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge has issued an abridged edition of "Robinson Crusoe," illustrated with some extremely nice chrcmolithographs. The work is suitable for young boys, who will be sure to appreciate the well-known incidents in Defoe's immortal work. Crusoe and his goats, his boat, his parrot, his man Friday, the wreck, the release, and his return to Europe—these are all given in the compilation before us. The condensation has been carefully done, nothing material having been omitted, while the pictures are va sans dire in the present day—everything that could be wished. A similar remark applies to the coloured designs which accompany "Home Sunbeams," a book for children who can appreciate art rather than literature. The designs are admirable, and artistic in the exterme. The poetry—well, it is suited to infantile minds, though we are prepared to avow it is above the average of nursery rhymes. rhymes.

VOCABULARY-ENGLISH AND ARABIC.+

Major Plunkett's admirable compendium of words in ordinary Major Plunkett's admirable compendium of words in ordinary use in Egypt will be welcomed by many a British officer, who would otherwise have to toil through page after page of huge dictionaries; and even then, as regards technical and military terms, the search is often fruitless. Of course, there is no pretence to profound scholarship in this small Vocabulary, which only just extends to 100 pages, albeit to gather together upwards of 3,650 words is a task involving considerable labour, and no less experience in the path of Arabic lore. Equally, of course, there are errors—what book is free from them?—but they are few, and the chief fault to be found is with reference to the transliteration, which is so haphazard that no reader can possibly divine how the words are written in the original character; but, since the Editor explains in a foot-note, that, as there was no suitable type available at Cairo, he was powerless, perhaps we have no right to complain. But why should not a new edition be prepared in complain. But why should not a new edition be prepared in London, properly printed with the Arabic type and reman characters side by side? This would materially enhance the value of the book, and, if done on the system pursued at Messrs. W. H. Allen and Co.'s Press, would not materially increase either the bulk or the cost. Moreover, at present there is no indication where the Vocabulary is procurable; the public cannot be expected to address themselves to Awad Hannah and Co., Cairo.

The protracted negotiations between the Court of Lisbon and the Holy See, in regard to the ecclesiastical patronage of the King of Portugal in India, have imposed upon M. do Canto delicate and trying duties. These he has executed with much tact and discrimination, and to the satisfaction, we believe, not only of the Portuguese community in India, but to that of his Government also.

PROSPECTUS.

This Company is formed for the purpose of supplying the public with pure and genuine Ceylon Tea, and to combine with it also the sale of pure Coffee.

It is an undoubted fact that Ceylon Tea is gradually growing in favour with the public, and it is also notorious the comparatively few people can procure it, and those who do cannot always get it pure and genuine. Even Teas sold as Ceylon are in many instances mixed with Chira and Indian; but by those who know what Ceylon Tea is, the very common question asked is, "Where can we get it pure?" As a strong evidence of the high estimation in which Ceylon Tea is held, one has only to hear the rem rks in its favourly the valuables of those who have visited the Indian and Colonial Exhibition, and have had a cup of real Ceylon Tea.

One great difficulty why the use of Ceylon Tca has not been more fully developed up to this time has been the smallness of surplies as compared with China and Indian, but as the production increases, which it evidently will dovery rapidly, it renders it all the more necessary that the larger supplies should be prominently placed before the notice of the actual consumer, and thus encourage a more general demand.

By therefore introducing channels on an extended scale for the sale of the pure and undulterated articles, a greater demand, it is confidently expected, will be created, as the advantage to the consumer must soon become increasi gly apparent, and the favourable position which Ceylon Teas have already commanded can thereby scarcely fail to be still further materially enhanced.

The intention is to open a Central Depot or Warehouse in London, and, as opportunities offer, to establish Branch Depots or Agencies in different parts of London and the provincial towns, and to adopt all the necessary sources and means for publicity.

The importations of Ceylon Tea have already amounted this year to seven millions of pounds weight, and with the increasing production promise very soon to reach twenty millions. From all these supplies of the various estates ample opportunity will be afforded for the Company to select suitable qualities according to their requirements, as it is intended to make the entire purchases in the London market from all the importations as brought forward. In adopting this course continued uniformity of each description sold by the Company can thus be insured, instead of depending always and solely on any particular estate, the quality from which may vary season by season.

No other than Caylon Tea will be bought or sold by the Company.

No other than Coylon Tea will be bought or sold by the Company.

It would be premature to form any calculation as to the quantity of Tea likely to pass through the Company's sources of disposal, but estimating the amount at only a quarter of a million of pounds weight, the profit would amply justify the expectation of a very good dividend.

The sale of Coffee also should produce very satisfactory results.

While the fullest means will be adopted to promote the safe extension of the Company's business, every regard will be paid to avoid unnecessary expense. No promotion money whatever will be paid. Arrangements are already in progress to carry out the intentions of the Company, so that no time will be lost in the furtherance of its operations.

Tea growers and merchants in Ceylon, and others in this country connected with the Ceylon trade, have been invited to take an interest in this Company, and thus assist in promoting its success.

Prospectuses, together with Forms of Application for Shares, may be obtained at the Offices of the Company, 13, Great Tower Street, London, E.C.

WITHOUT indulging in any extravagant ideas, there seems no reason why the Company's sales should be limited to the moderately-estimated amount of a quarter of a million its. annually, and if the profits be calculated, even at a considerable reduction, on the basis of those stated by "Stocks and Shares" of the 16th instant, they would still yield dividends which may be variously estimated from 20 to 30 per cent.

THE COMMAND IN UPPER BURMA.

THE announcement of the sad and untimely death of the good and gallant Sir Herbert Macpherson was immediately made the text for a number of articles in the Press at home, in which the readers of the journals in question were told that something like a ranic had happened in Uprev

Burma, and that if Sir Frederick Roberts was not at once hastened to assume the vacant command disaster to the British arms or ruin to the prestige of the British name might follow. "For," argued the wise men of the West, "England is without a General (save Wolseley and Roberts) capable of handling 30,000 soldiers in the field, and there are 30,000 British soldiers in Burma now without a Commander." In the mental confusion of the moment the writers forgot, or probably did not know, how the British force in Burma was distributed, or what was the peculiar nature of the work which Sir Herbert Macpherson had been sent from Madras to undertake. Nor had they troubled themselves to inquire why that officer had been sent at all. The idea which possessed them was that an enormous mass of people had risen as one man against the annexation by England of their beloved country, and that, although England had poured into the hostile territory no less than 30,000 of her choicest troops, she was still unable to stem the torrent of patriotism which was rushing against her wicked and uncalled-for act of annexation. According to this theory it had become necessary to send to the head of the British troops-the Commander-in-Chief at Madras, a tried soldier and able leader; and when he fell by the sad and unexpected stroke of disease, there was no way of saving the honour of the British arms and name in Burma but by despatching to the scene the Commanderin-Chief of all India-to whom only the lamented General Macpherson was second. And this argument was further enlarged upon by the assurance given to the British public that there was no officer in the British army who could be safely entrusted with the responsibility of succeeding to General Macpherson's command but Sir Frederick Roberts. Nobody can question the right of the public, both of England and of India, to feel satisfied that General Roberts has assumed such responsibility, and it may be taken for granted that his Excellency, as scon as the opportunity permits, will carry out all the arrangements which have been made for the subjugation of Upper Burma to a satisfactory issue, and again deserve the thanks of Parliament, and perhaps higher honours, on account of his success. Even if Sir Frederick should obtain a peerage for being the pacificator of Burma, nobody will grudge him the honour. But it is not just to the splendid body of officers now serving Her Majesty in India to allow the reproach to go forth unchallenged that there was no capable successor to be found to Sir Herbert Macpherson but the Commander-in-Chief himself. We are sure that Sir Frederick Roberts, gallant soldier and generous gentleman as he is, would be the first to repel such an insiruation as degrading and untrue, but such insinuation certain Press critics at home have not hesitated to make. The insinuation has been made rather through ignorance perhaps than for any desire to give offence. But, then, evil is as often wrought from want of head as from want of heart. These critics were not, perhaps, aware of the exact reasons which led to Sir Frederick Roberts taking up the vacancy which the lamentable death of Sir Herbert Macpherson occasioned in the Burma command. This is explained by a military contemporary as follows:-

It is stated that General Roberts proceeds to Burma at his own desire, and he possibly does so, for the reasons which induced him to recommend Sir Herbert Macpherson to that command, viz., the inadvisability of continuing the former system of divided commands, and the advantage of having one supreme general officer at the head of affairs in the extended military operations which have been found necessary for the restoration of order in that country. The appointment of a junior officer, not belonging to the Madras command, which until lately was supposed to include that of Burma, to succeed Sir Herbert Macpherson, might have occasioned a little friction with the Madras Government, for in our curious system of a trinity of chief military commands in India a clashing of views is always a rossible contingency. No troubled question of patronage or right can arise when the Commander-in-Chief in India takes the field in Burma in succession to the late Commander-in-Chief of Madras.

This is more likely to be the correct solution of the matter than that put forward by some of our morning and evening monitors, to the effect that there was no other capable officer available for such a post. If the latter insinuation had really any foundation we might well ask, with the military writer from whom we have quoted, "Of what use has been our elaborate machinery of military education, Staff College training, Aldershot, and Camps of Exercise in India, to say nothing of practical experience gained on fields of varied and difficult warfare during the last decade or so?" But it is a curious fashion which the British public has of getting into a panic upon the very slightest provocation and then crying out that there can be but one deliverer-some popular favourite of the moment. Yesterday England had only one General - Lord Wolseley; to-day Sir Frederick Roberts has taken his Lordship's place, and were it not that General Booth is a man of peace and not of war the transition of favour to the Salvationist General to-morrow might not be impossible. Macaulay has ridiculed the spasmodic seizures of virtue in which the British public have been apt to indulge; the spasmodic seizures of alarm have not been less ridiculous. The death of Sir Herbert Macpherson was a national loss, but had he fallen as he no doubt would have preferred to have fallen—at the head of his troops in the field, his place would have been quietly filled up, and there would have been no panicmongering writing. It is sad for a country to lose a gallant, able, and distinguished officer; but every such officer, and there are many still in England's ranks, would prefer the Spartan's epitaph—as dictated by the mother of Brasidas-than the querulous lament of those who in thinking that they honour the dead cast a stigma upon the living, and help to make their country contemptible in the eyes of friends or foes abroad.

DINNER TO THE RIGHT HON. ROBERT BOURKE.

A dinner was given on Thursday last at the Northbrook Indian Club to the Right Hon. Robert Bourke, in honour of his appointment as Governor of Madras. Lord Northbrook presided, and was supported by Lord Iddesleigh, Mr. E. Stanhope, Sir Ashley Eden, Sir C. Brownlow. Sir Owen Burne, Sir R. Meade, Sir A. J. Arbuthnot, Sir Barrow Ellis, Mr. D. Naoroji, Mr. M. D. Cama, Mr. M. Ali Khan, Dr. Kaka, and others.

Sir A. J. Arbuthnot, Sir Barrow Ellis, Mr. D. Naoroji, Mr. M. D. Cama, Mr. M. Ali Khan, Dr. Kaka, and others.

Lord Northbrook, in proposing the health of the guest of the evening, said that the Government of Madras was second to few in importance in the Empire, and imposed upon its Governor duties and responsibilities of the highest order. So many persons experienced in the administration of India were present that evening that he need hardly state that the duties of the Governors and Lieutenant-Governors increased in importance day by day. The spread of education had given rise to aspirations of new kinds, and the duties which the Governors and Lieutenant Governors had to perform had been greatly increased by the system of decentralisation established in India by Lord Mayo, the lamented brother of the new Governor of Madras—(cheers). The general remarks which he had made with regard to the increased embarrassments attending the administration of India applied as much to Madras as to any other part of the country. Nowhere had education spread so largely as in Madras, and certainly there the Native gentlemen were not behind those of any other part of India in intelligence. He could not say that night what he would have been able to say the day before—that Mr. Bourke would be welcomed to India by that distinguished soldier whose loss they were all deploring. All who knew the services that had been rendered by Sir Herbert Macpherson would realise the importance of having with the Army in India a man in whom the soldiers would confide, and the loss of such a man was the event which he could not help noticing even on such an occasion as that. No doubt Mr. Bourke would be welcomed on his arrival by civil servants anxious to give loyal assistance to one in his position, and by Indian gentlemen equal to any in loyalty and devotion to the Crown. It was not necessary to discuss the politics of the Province of Madras. The occasion was one which led him rather to speak of its personal aspects, and the history of the province recalled to mind the long roll of distinguished names associated with the English Government since it had been settled in India. They would recollect that associated with the history of the Presidency were the names of Clive, Wellington, and Sir Thomas Munro, whose life and labours had been preserved by Sir A. Arbuthnot. Many other names might be mentioned. Lord Harris, who had written regretting that he was unable to be present that evening, was a descendant of one Governor of Madras, and another name should be mentioned—that of Lord Elphinstone, afterwards Governor of Bombay, and who was distinguished in many ways in the history of India. More recently, Lord Napier and Ettrick, after holding high diplomatic appointments, had presided over Madras. He was followed by Lord Hobart, who was distinguished in literature and by talent and in the Civil Service of his country. Then there was the Duke of Buckingham, and, lastly, the Presidency had as Governor Sir M. Grant Duff, who was remarkable for literary and political culture. But what he was especially desirous of saying political culture. But what he was especially desirous of saying that night was that the man of whom they were taking farewell was well fitted to take his place on the roll he had described—(loud cheers). Mr. Bourke had been many years a member of the House of Commons, and a leading member on the Conservative side of politics. He had represented in the House of Commons one of the greatest offices of the Government. They were well aware that he had done his work in that House in a way which aware that he had done his work in that House in a way when had commanded the respect of all who had had anything to do with him. All present knew well that they had no politics at that club, and he thought it would be well if the discussion of Indian topics could be carried on everywhere as they were in the club, without reference to politics. They had had three changes of Government within the country that they had had three changes of Governments. reference to politics. They had had three changes of Government within very recent times, and this fact constituted a warning as to the embarrassments which might attend the administration of to the embarrassments which might attend the administration of India if its affairs were too closely connected with politics. In regard to the great questions affecting India, there was no difference of opinion between the two parties. He might remark that a training in the House of Commons was an excellent thing for a Governor of an Indian Presidency. It taught those who underwent it that all their work was liable to be challenged and was carried on in face of the people. That was the lesson which the late Lord Russell spoke of as specially important in connection with the English House of Commons, bringing as it did the genius of representative Government to bear upon the adminisgenius of representative Government to bear upon the adminis-tration of India. Perhaps the particular branch of public work with which Mr. Bourke had been concerned rendered him peculiarly fitted to take up his new responsibilities. A connection with foreign affairs gave statesmen a wider view of politics than the mere view which association with domestic affairs made possible. One other consideration confirming the admirable character of the selection which had been made in sending Mr. Bourke to Madras was that he did not go there as a stranger to the country, Madras was that he did not go there as a stranger to the country, but as one who had been connected with it through the whole of his life. They all knew that he was a son-in-law of the Marquis of Dalhousie, a Viceroy distinguished for genius and courage, and also that he was brother to Lord Mayo, whose career in India was so sadly cut short. In conclusion, he hoped that all present would join in drinking to the health of their guest with the utmost cordiality—(loud cheers.)

Mr. Bourke, in acknowledging the toast, thanked every member of the Northbrook Indian Club for their handsome and enjoyable entertainment. He thanked old friends for their kindness in entertainment. He thanked old friends for their kindness in entertainment. He thanked old friends for their kindness in coming there, and others whom he could not claim as old friends he hoped would regard him as a friend on all subjects connected with India. He thanked the noble lord for the terms in which he had proposed the toast, and he thought it augured well for the future of India when they saw one who had occupied the position of Viceroy in that country taking part in a gathering of that character and bidding God-speed to a friend who had just undertaken the responsible duties of the Governor of Madras. Lord Northbrook had alluded to one sad subject. Those who knew Sir Herbert Macuherson as a member of the Madras Council knew Sir Herbert Macpherson as a member of the Madras Council he was sure heard with great sorrow the news of his death. It would be a great misfortune for him that he would not have the benefit at Madras of the advice of one who had held a high position in the service, not only as a military officer but as a distinguished administrator. Sir Herbert Macpherson's death would enhance the responsibility of others connected with the province, and inspire them with a deeper desire to do their best in the service of their Sovereign. Lord Northbrook had also alluded service of their Sovereign. Lord Northbrook had also alluded to another subject personal to himself—the character of his beloved brother, Lord Mayo. So many old friends of his brother were present that evening that he could not trust himself to speak at any length upon the subject, but he thought that any statesman might feel that he would be ready to lay down his life for his country if his memory afterwards remained so green as that of Lord Mayo. He was under no delusion with regard 'to the responsibilities which he would have to undertake in Madras. He knew that a great deal was expected from him, and the correspondence which he had was expected from him, and the correspondence which he had received during the last few months showed him that he was expected to take an equal interest in finance, in army administration, in public works, in revenue matters, in education, and in many subsidiary subjects. He was clearly expected to 1e proficient in archeology, in all arts, Indian and modern, meteorology, cient in archeology, in all arts, Indian and modern, meteorology, and in botany—(laughter)—and it was quite clear that people who were the votaries of recreation expected him to be a liberal patron of the drama, of music, of hunting, of polo playing, and of lawn tenuis—(laughter). He did not know in which of these departments his proficiency or deficiency would be most apparent, but he knew that he would have to do his duty under the watchfulness of a vigilant Press, ever ready to give advice when it might be required or even in advance of any demands. the watchfulness of a vigilant Press, ever ready to give advice when it might be required or even in advance of any demands that might be made upon it. He was quite aware also that he would have to perform his duty in the face of the House of Commons and he hoped that anything in which he was concerned might be discussed in a manner devoid of party spirit. A Parlimentary experience of eighteen years, however, did not make him hopeful on that point. In the position to which he had been appointed his wish was to stand on the ancient ways and avail himself of the wisdom of those who had gone before him, rather than endeavour to make a name by originality. India had been won by our predecessors, and it would be kept by the arts of peace and pure administration. In conclusion, he referred to the interest which his brother had taken in the education of the nobles of India, and pointed out the manner in which that to the interest which his brother had taken in the education of the nobles of India, and pointed out the manner in which that work was associated with one great purpose of Lord Mayo's life—the development of local self-government. They all realised the extent to which local self government in this country depended upon the cooperation of aristocratic families, and he looked forward to the time when the people of India would realize the advantages which they would derive from the development of local self-government—(cheers). In bidding them farewell he expressed a hope that the Northbrook Club would protect him in his absence against persons who might assail him unjustly and his absence against persons who might assail him unjustly, and that when the time came for his return to England he would have the approval of public opinion both in India and in England-(loud cheers)

The proceedings then terminated.

Author of "Peepul Leaves," "Under the Rose," &c.

"Mr. Keene has not, we believe, a great reputation in England as yet, but in India he seems to be well known."—Pall Mall Gazette.

"Mr. Keene's is no untried hand. Well known as a poet in North-Westorn India, in this volume there is nothing to gainsay his right to the name. . . Often sweet and graceful, always vigorous and thoughtful, his verses possess the true lyric swing."—QUEEN.

"He has a gift of sweet and pathetic expression which endows his lyrical offorts with a charm and freshness quite their own."—Home News.

"We think Mr. Koene is at his best when original; and prefer the latter half of the book to the translations with which the first part is filled."—Oxford TATLER.

"It is impossible to avoid being struck, not only with their boauty and tenderness, but with the fact that they are almost throughout in a minor key. . . Very sweet, very beautiful, but very sad."—Allen's Indian Mail.

SIR HENRY RAEBURN, R.A.

With Portraits and Appendix by his Great-Grandson,

WILLIAM RAEBURN ANDREW.

Even to look and handle this volume is an enjoyment—nor is the fair ext mal promise believed by its contents. This brief memoir of the most eminent Scottish portrait painter is agreeably and profitable reading.—
Whitchall Review.

This book is the first separate "Life of Raeburn," and besides being a good sketch of his cereor as far as it goes, contains a list of his works exhibited in Edinburgh in 1876.—Contemporary Review.

Mr. Andrew writes about "the Reynolds of the North", with all that zealous warmth of appreciation which is due from a Scotchman to a Scotchman, a warmth which grows still more fervid when its object is an ancestor.

—Athenæum.

Mr. Andrew does justice to the manliness and amiability of Raeburn's character, and gives us some delightful glimpses of his intercourse with many of the great Scotsmen of his time.—Scotsman.

THE "VOICE OF INDIA."

INDIA.

THERE are in England large classes willing and anxious to do justice to India, but they find it very difficult to know how to act. They complain that Indian questions are intricate; that the opinions of official experts are contradictory; and that the people of India are dumb, and do not give expression to their needs. This defect is now remedied by publishing monratury (in Bombay) a magazine somewhat similar in nature to Public Opinion in England, which provides a compendium of all that is most valuable in the native journals throughout India on the leading topics of the day. The Voice of India thus gives forth a clear sound, interpreting between the rulers and the ruled, and making known the true wishes and feelings of the Indian toepple.

ing between the ruiers and the ruied, and making known the true wishes and feelings of the Indian veople.

The Magazine advocatos no views of its own. It seeks only to reflect with care and accuracy the views set forth in the native press. The Indian people are naturally decile and conservative; and it will be seen that the writings thus brought before the English public are characterised by a knowledge of facts, and generally by practical good sense and moderation. No doubt grievances are from time to time being set forth; but it is a policy of prudence, no less than of justice to give these grievances a fair constitutional hearing. Accordingly, it is hoped that this publication will be subscribed for by Members of Purliament and other public men destrous of dealing with Indian questions, and that the facts thus brought together in a convenient form will be of value to journalists and other public writers. It is specially desired to bring the Magazine before the public in Clubs, Reading-rooms, Libraries, and Institutes throughout England, with a view to promote a sustained and intelligent interest in the welfare of our Indian Empire, comprising as it does 220 millions of our fellow-subjects.

OPINIONS.

The Calculta Review for Oct. ber reached us a day or two ago, and a glance at its contents shows that the number more than sustains the reputation which this old and favourite publication is again achieving. The Review is rapidly regaining the position which it there is no fear of the Indian Review, or the Asiatic Quarterly rivalling it in public favour.—Statesman, October, 1886.

The best service which I ever rendered in India, or, indeed, for India, was the establishment, single-handed, of the Calcutta Review, which has done far more for Indian literature than anything I have written under my own name.—J. W. KAYE, Athense im Club, June 23, 1872.

The Calcutta Review has given us valuable articles on the army. Some from the pen of Sir Henry Lawrence, who wrote with the spirit of prophesy, of the coming storm of which he was one of the noblest victims.—Address of the C.-in-C. at the U.S. Inst. of India.

The Cleutia Review has not only throughout its care-reflected the highest honour on its public-spirited promoters and its wel-known distinguished contributors, but has done much to help forward the reconstruction of our system of governing India.—Westminster Review.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

General Intelligence.

[BY OVERLAND MAIL.]

THE Overland Mail brings us letters and advices from Bombay to the 15th October; from Allahabad to the 13th October; and from Calcutta and Madras to the 13th October.

No meeting of the Imperial Legislative Council has been held since the despatch of the last Overland Mail.

THE Viceroy's tour in Southern India will embrace Hyderabad, Mysore, Trichinopoly, Madura, Tanjore, and Pondicherry. His Excellency will embark at Pondicherry for Calcutta, where the Viceregal party are timed to arrive about December 13th. The usual cold-weather Levée will be held on December the 20th, and the Drawing-Room on the 23rd.

THE DURE AND DUCHESS OF CONNAUGHT arrived at Simla on the 12th Oct.

THE Government of India decline to legislate on the subjects of infant marriage and enforced widowhood on the lines proposed by Mr. Malabari, but suggests an amendment of the law as regards the forfeiture of property on the remarriage of a widow and the supply of machinery by which the Hindoo widow who fails to obtain the consent of her caste-fellows may nevertheless marry without renouncing her religion.

SIR AUCKLAND COLVIN visits Bombay, Madras, Nagpur, and Lucknow to confer with the various heads of Government at those places, arriving at Calcutta on the 21st of November.

THE HON. J. B. PEILE has joined the Central Committee of the Countess of Dufferin's Fund. Sir A. Colvin has joined the Committee in place of Sir S. Bayley, and the Maharajah of Kuch Behar has become a life member of the Committee. The Rajah of Rutlam has sent the fund a second donation of Rs. 1,000.

GOVERNMENT have instructed the Executive Engineer, Presidency, to prepare plans and estimates for a new European General Hospital in Bombay. The building will be of the plainest design, and the cost is to be limited to ten lakhs of rupees.

It is estimated that if the export of wheat from India should continue at the same rate as was the case during the first quarter of this year, the total quantity exported will be about one and three-quarter million tons.

A REPORT was circulated a short time ago that the Myngoon Prince had made his escape from Pondicherry, and taken refuge in the Shan States. The statement has been officially contradicted by the French authorities.

THE seven sales of Bengal opium that have already taken place have resulted in a deficiency of Rs. 16,18,565 as compared with the estimate. On the other hand, Bombay, during the past six months, has produced a surplus of Rs. 25,03,150.

THE vacancies in the Bombay Legislative Council have been filled by the appointment of Khan Bahadur Kazi Shabuddin, C.I.E., and Rao Bahadur Mahadev Wasudev Barve, C.I.E.

THE BISHOP OF BOMBAY has gone to Aden and Perim on visitation, and will not return before Nov. 2nd.

THE AMER has revised the import and export duties levied on goods. In Kandahar the rates on imports of cloths are one-fifteenth of its value; miscellaneous articles one-eighth; tea and indigo, six Candahari rupees per maund (8lbs.); oils, varying rates; on all articles exported towards Herat, one-fortieth of value is taken.

ARRANGEMENTS are in progress which will prevent the grave scandal that would arise were Mr. Sullivan allowed to act as Governor of Madras during the interval between Sir Grant Duff's departure and the Honourable R. Bourke's arrival.

THE religious riots at Delhi continued up to Saturday, and a number of lives have been lost. The Hindus desecrated the Jama Musjid, and the Mahomedans retaliated by destroying a temple. So serious was the aspect of affairs that the troops at Delhi were not considered sufficient to aid the civil authorities in maintaining order, and Meerut was indented on for cavalry and infantry.

It may be remembered that some months ago an unfortunate incident occurred near Beeling, north of Moulmein, some sepoys of the 30th Madras Infantry firing into a party of Shan traders under the impression that they were dacoits. Nine out of the ten sepoys concerned have been committed for trial on charges varying from culpable homicide to causing and attempting to cause grievous hurt.

LIEUTENANT BURROWS, Assistant Provost-Marshal to the Burma Field Force, whose name was associated with that of Colonel Hooper in the matter of the Mandalay executions, has been entirely exonerated by the Government of India from the charges brought against him, and from all responsibility for the proceedings of the Provost-Marshal. The Secretary of State agrees with this decision of the Government, and General White has been instructed to make these facts known in Field Force Orders.

UPPER Burma reports for the week unding the 10th October state that on the 8th inst. the number of people relieved at Mandalay by the free distribution of rice was 592, and the number daily employed on relief works was 2,815. A few dacoities have occurred in the Mandalay district. The Kyankse, Ava, and the Pagan districts are generally quiet. A new post has been established between Ava and Kyankse, and another is being established in Sagaing. The Eastern Myingyan district is quiet. In Western Myingyan the troops have encountered dacoits, inflicting severe loss and capturing a few muskets and gingals. The disarmament of the Myingyan districts is progressing. The crop prospects are good. In Pagan rain is wanted. Dacoits continue active. In the western part of the Minbu district a gang was surprised by the police and ten dacoits killed and four captured. Crops prospects in Minbu good. No news from Bhamo. Lower Burma is quiet.

There has been a novel strike at Trichinopoly. The bazaar men, it appears, combined in marking their strong disapproval of the Income-tax and increased Municipal taxation by closing their shops and ceasing to exercise their professions. The neighbouring villages followed the example, and all classes of the community were put to much inconvenience by the difficulty of obtaining provisions. Some chetties are said to have declared that rather than pay Income-tax they would keep their places of business closed for two years. The Mahomedans especially were said to be in a state of much excitement, which was increased by the return of the Mohurrum. For several days no European durst make an appearance in the street?

A contemporary's correspondent with the Afghan Boundary Commission describes a game played by the Afghan cavalry called "goat," which was a novelty to the Indians. It consists, the correspondent says, of one man seizing a goat and riding off with it, followed by all the rest, who try to get hold of it and tear off as big a piece as they can. This continues till the goat is torn to pieces, and the man who has obtained the largest portion wins the game. Or the game is played for a certain stated time, and the man who has the goat at the moment time is called is the winner. The way the men playing use their whips on each other and on their own and their adversaries' horses is a caution. The game, as usually played, must be a very cruel one, as the goat is seized while alive, but at Shadian the poor beast was killed beforehand, a much more merciful proceeding. The man who carries the goat has a bad time of it, and it is not an easy matter to hold it on the saddle by putting the hind legs under one thigh and going off at a gallop with the carcass banging the flanks of the horse one is riding.

Notes of the Week.

Some telegrams from Renter's agents in India, stating that there has been a mutinous spirit amongst certain Afghan regiments, and that a treasure convoy has been attacked and the treasure looted, have been utilised by several London papers for sensational purposes. One journal called attention to the "Revolt against the Ameer" as a serious matter for the reflection of English readers; another saw the evil handiwork of Russia in the matter; but the moral drawn by all was to show everything in the darkest colours against British power and British inter-The object, of course, was to make the papers in question sell, but the readers were not informed of this fact, nor of another, that mutiny amongst Afghan soldiers is a normal state of things, a report of which would occasion no surprise anywhere but in Fleet-street.

BURMA continues, of course, to be a fruitful subject for the commentators on British policy in the East, who can bring all the advantages of ignorance to the task they have set themselves to. One Radical organ has discovered that a statement in the Times, to the effect that it took eight years to complete the conquest of British Burma, and that it may take some time yet to put Upper Burma in order, is evidently "an inspired communication manifestly emanating from the India Office," and it need not be added that the writer has not a high opinion of that office. Indeed, he says :-- " This nation will never discover the greed, unscrupulousness, and untruthfulness of the India Office and the Calcutta Government of India until their joint agency has involved the Empire in some irretrievable calamity."

AND that we are near that final catastrophe may be inferred from what it is predicted will happen when Sir Frederick Roberts, "some six weeks hence, takes the field with his forty thousand men." The Burmese will offer no direct opposition to the British advance, but "after it has passed they will cut in upon the baggage, harass the rear guard, intercept communications, and wear out our troops by false alarms and nightly feint attacks; and as soon as the coming of the rains and the flooding of the country compels the breaking up of the army in the field, they will again appear in force, attacking British outposts, plundering convoys, and collecting the revenues from defenceless villages." The military genius which penned this mistakes his vocation if he continues to wield the pen instead of the sword. It is possible, however, that the British commanders in Burma will be able to devise some method of counteracting Burmese strategy.

Bor it is not only against the dacoits of Upper Burma that Sir Frederick Roberts will have a difficulty in contending. In the Shan States and on the Chinese frontier beyond Bhamo there is an army "belonging to the Orthodox Chinese party" prepared to give him battle, under the leadership of "three Black Flag leaders of distinction from Tonquin." The writer does not hold with the Times that General Roberts is the only capable general England has in the East. "Contrariwise" he says, "With judgment, with tact and moderation, these and all other difficulties might, perhaps, be got over without fighting, but Sir Frederick Roberts's career in Afghanistan showed that he was conspicuously lacking in these qualities." Here is a difference of opinion with a vengeance! journalists fall out about the abilities of a commander, what is a poor helpless nation like the British to do?

YET this is not all the disastrous information which was sold for a penny. There is more trouble in store for us. "In Upper Burma the military dangers are slight, but a British force once entangled in the Shan mountains, and assailed conjointly by Shans and Chinese, would be in no small peril of encountering a fate like that of Elphinstone in the first Afghan war." It would indeed, but perhaps matters will not come to that pass yet.

In Burma itself, however, the state of things is looked upon in a different if not in a much brighter light. The local Press of Rangoon complains that a false economy is at the bottom of all the present mischief.

Sir Charles Bernard has been attempting the impossible task of Sir Charles Bernard has been attempting the impossible task of making war without expending money, or, at all events, of trying to pay for the cost of the war out of the first year's revenue of the conquered country. With this object an attempt has been made to govern Upper Burma with a staff wholly inadequate in point of numbers, and consisting in most instances of persons wanting in the necessary qualifications. The only possible recommendation of such a system was its supposed cheapness. Sir Charles Bernard, who is a man of almost superhuman energy, tried to do the work of half-a-dozen men. As might be anticipated, he failed in his self-allotted task. The attempt at cheap government has broken down, and, so far from having resulted in any saying, it has necessitated an enormous military expenditure. any saving, it has necessitated an enormous military expenditure.

THE HON. H. E. SULLIVAN, who has taken three months' leave to England, comes here, according to the Madras Mail, entirely on his own accord, without pressure or anything tantamount to a recall from the India Office, and he will, it is said, very likely return to settle down on his estate at Ootacamund, which has "cost him much in reputation, and has been more fruitful of anxiety than in profit during the current year." Mr. Sullivan's five years tenure of his seat in Council expires on the 12th June CALGUTTA, OCT. 31. The Finance Committee has returned to Calcutta after spend-The Finance Committee has returned to Calcutta after spending about a fortnight at Darjeeling in consulting the local Government, and examining the heads of departments and certain officers who were summoned thither for the purpose. It is believed that the committee will not recommend any great changes in this province, as the Bengal Government claims to have already effected all possible economies. The committee will be employed during the next few weeks in preparing its report.

A telegram from Madras states that the Supreme Government, at the suggestion of the Finance Committee, has ordered the closing of the Madras gunpowder factory, on the ground that Madras can be easily served by the Bengal and Bombay factories. The telegram adds that the annual saving will be Rs.42,000, but that there is a great local outcry against the proposal.

Lady Dufferin has gone to Lucknow to nurse her son, Lord Clandeboye, who is suffering from an attack of typhoid fever. Lord Dufferin's intended visit to Goa has been abandoned owing to the death of the Governor's wife.

Mr. George Yeale, a well known leading merchant of Calcutta, has presented to the Bengal Chamber of Commerce an elaborate note on the silver question, arguing that a low rate of exchange is beneficial to India, and that the impecuniosity of the Government arises from other causes. He proposes to move the following resolution at the next meeting of the Chamber:

"That this Chamber believes that any attempt to raise the value of silver would, if successful, seriously impede the progress of India, and deprecates all action on the part of the Government to subordinate the interests of this dependency to those of foreign Powers, or to those of any other part of Her Majesty's dominions."

The accounts of the external land trade of British India for the accounts of the extensive and state that the three months ending on June 30th show an average increase of 44 lakhs on the corresponding periods of the two preceding years. The increase is almost entirely in exports, and is mainly due to the Scinde-Pishin railway trade, which has risen from 21 lakhs in 1884 to 105 lakhs this year. It is a remarkable fact that while the export of Indian tea to the transfrontier States has remained stationary, the export of tea to distant foreign States has increased by over two lakhs.

The cordial reception of the Afghan Frontier Commission by the Ameer and his conduct in decorating Sir W. Ridgeway and the other officers have created an excellent impression throughout India. The Commission will, it is expected, reach Peshawur early this week. It is stated that Sir W. Ridgeway will proceed to England at once.

TIBET AND SIKKIM.

CALCUTTA, OCT. 31.

The Prime Minister of Sikkim arrived in Darjeeling on Wednesday, and as received in durbar by the Lieutenant-Governor on the following day. He confirms what I have already stated regarding the practical occupation of Eastern Sikkim by the Tibetans. The invaders have built forts commanding the British road to the Jelaph Pass and the approaches to several other passes, and declare that the territory occupied now forms a portion of Tibet. The Maharajah of Sikkim, who is at Oumbi, in Tibet, is powerless to expel the intruders even if he should wish to do so. As Sikkim is a protected State, it is clearly our duty to expel the invaders; but although the invading force numbers only 400 or 500 badly-armed men, who could easily be driven out by two companies of European troops with half a mountain battery, the Supreme Government seems disinclined to take any action.

A gentleman who has lately returned from an extended tour in Western Sikkim informs me that his inquiries entirely confirm the impression prevalent in India regarding the fictitious nature of the opposition to the proposed Tibet mission. Every one, he says, assured him that the opposition was confined to a small body of trading monks at Lhassa, who dreaded any interference with their monopolies. The monks, it appears, refuse to allow traders to pass the frontier without passports, and make it a condition for the granting of a passport that the trader should either pay them the larger portion of his profits, or should, as they prefer, trade with money borrowed from them at interest at 4 per cent. per mensem. It has been calculated by persons having good sources of information that were these obstructions removed, and free intercourse with Tibet permitted, an inexhaustible quantity of perhaps the finest wool in the world could be laid down in London at from 4d. to 5d. per pound.

ANGLO-INDIAN PRESS.

THI GREAT GHEE SCARE. (Times of India.)

A very unpleasant sensation has been caused in Calcutta, especially among the Hindoo population, by the discovery that such of the ghee consumed there is made of animal fat. For the last month the papers have been full of letters on the subject, and the revelations are disagreeable enough even to Europeans, while to Natives, to whom animal fat is an abomination, they must have been painful in the extreme. One of the correspondents, for whose accuracy the Iudian Daily News holds itself dents, for whose accuracy the Lauran Laury from holds losen responsible, gives a few facts regarding the matter. The fat is purchased by the tallow-makers from the butchers, who receive an amount of cash in advance, and put aside each day's accumulation until six or eight maunds of "rendered tallow" has been collected, which looks, we are told, "very nice and clean." Here contents to tall his own story: "During we may permit the correspondent to tell his own story:—"During this period of accumulation, in the months of May, June, July, and August, the process of decomposition is actively proceeding, and in forty-eight hours the first day's collection is one mass of maggots, and so on till enough has been collected to melt. Maggots and fat are all tumbled into a cauldron, and melted up together; the maggot, all but his skin, readily dissolves, the skin floats on the surface, and is skimmed off along with any other scum which rises. This so-called tallow is then put into jars, and sent into the baggot and sold as tallow if for manufacturing the form the bazaar and sold as tallow fit for manufacturing ghee from. It is then mixed with earth nut-oil and lard, and goes forth to consumers as an article fit for food." The idea is almost as revolting from a point of health as from a caste standpoint. nately for themselves ghee is not used by Englishmen. But all sections of the Native community who are forbidden to eat animal food consume ghee largely, and we may imagine the horror of the Hindoos when they discovered that they have been eating the fat of cows, while the Mahomedans who had been eating the lard of the unclean animal could not have been in much better case. Owing to caste restrictions the manufacture of ghee has been kept entirely in Native hands, and the whole responsibility of its manufacture from fat—from the fat of offal and bones and anything that will yield fat-must be placed upon unscrupulous Natives who did not care how much they caused their co-religionists to violate the sacred obligations of caste, so long as they themselves made a handsome profit.

In the long discussions with which the Calcutta newspapers bave been filled every shade of opinion has been amply represented. It was argued that ghee made from fat is not necessarily unwholesome, and, as it is undoubtedly cheap, some people were anxious that its sale should be continued. Very similar material, we are told, is now worked up into "butterine, and largely used both in Europe and America. It is not what the Butterman in Qur Boys would call "Dosset," but it is preferable in taste to much butter that is really genuine. In England the law protects the public by requiring all mixed or adulterated articles to sold as such, and the penalty is only inflicted if they are sold as the genuine article. In some parts of the United States an Act has been recently introduced for the purpose of regulating the sale of "oleomargarine," in substance not unlike this fat-adultered ghee. All dealers in imitation butter are required to take out a license and to exhibit a sign showing what they deal in, so that the public know what they are about, and can purchase real butter or oleomargarine, according to their purses or their fancy. In India, however, the circumstances are entirely different, and we quite agree with the following paragraph in the Indian Daily News. "If," says the writer there, "a Hindoo of the genuine orthodox type were to believe that his ghee had been partly composed of animal fat, possibly—horribile dictu—of the fat of a cow, he would think his soul consigned to perdition." He has a right, then, to look for special legal protection, and we are glad that the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal saw the urgency of the case, and refused to listen to the suggestion of the Calcutta Health Society that any legislation against adulteration in the food used by the Hindoos would constitute an invidious distinction, and place the Europeans at a serious disadvantage unless the articles used by them were protected in a similar way. Yet, to judge by the correspondence, a considerable section of the European community in Bengal seem to think they have been badly treated because an urgent law has been enacted to prevent the Hindoos becoming outcasts unawaves. A general measure dealing with the adulteration of food may or may not be necessary for the whole of India. That is one question. The particular adulteration of ghee with animal fat is another question altogether, having a religious as well as a sanitary side. The people who have unwittingly committed the offence of eating animal fat will scarcely care to say much more about it, and they have so many fellows in misfortune that none of them are likely to be submitted to any sort of caste penalty. To an Englishman the subject is only one for interesting and perplexing study. But to every high-caste Hindoo it is, we may presume, a subject of considerable personal importan

BRIGANDAGE IN BURMA.

(Englishman.)

There is one element in the rebellion and brigandage which have been so long rife in Burma which has been ignored by the London Times and other Home journals. There is a persistency in representing the risings of rebel princes and outlaws as a national resistance to British authority which is contradicted by present facts and past history. The deposition of Theebaw from the throne at Mandalay by the British Government is regarded throughout Burma as a political death. From time immemorial the death of an Asiatic sovereign has been followed by a bloody war between his sons for the succession to the throne. As most Asiatic rulers are in the practice of polygamy, the number of princely pretenders is often enormous, and the evil they commit in the way of robbery and outrage, and the levy of black mail, is beyond all calculation. In the Mogul Empire of India the legitimate sons were limited to four in number, but the fratricidal wars between these four princes always sufficed to convulse the empire. There were wars to the knife, which were pursued with Asiatic ferocity, until all perished except the one who eventually secured the throne. The remedies which were sometimes adopted to prevent these bloody collisions were often more tragic than open war. In Turkey civil war was only prevented by a lavish use of the bowstring in the royal seraglio, and all the sons of the deceased sovereign, legitimate and illegitimate, excepting the one ordained for the throne, were mercilessly put to death by palace assassins as an affair of State. In Persia such wholesale butchery was more or less avoided, but every prince and kinsmal of the deceased Shah was deprived of eyesight, and thereby, according to Oriental ideas, was rendered incapable of ruling the kingdom.

without dwelling on these horrible atrocities, it is enough, as far as Burma is concerned, to recall the terrible massacres that accompanied or followed the accession of every sovereign who succeeded Alompra, and which horrified the civilised world when Theebaw ascended the throne at Mandalay. The deposition of Theebaw and his deportation to Southern India left the throne of Mandalay as vacant as if the "Lord of the White Elephant" had died in his bed. Those who escaped the massacres which were carried out at his accession and during his reign, whether princes or pretenders, considered that they were justified in setting up rival claims to the throne while carrying on their accustomed game of brigandage at the head of their respective gangs. Meanwhile, however, the British were in actual possession of the capital, and it was obvious that until British authority could be driven out of Upper Burma, no Burmese Prince whatever stood the slightest chance of seizing the throne and reigning as king. Under such circumstances the British were the common enemy of every prince and pretender in Upper Burma. But to suppose for the possession of the throne was as a rebellious the whole nation against the introduction of British rule an obvious fallacy; yet Radical members of Parliament accepted "the fallacy without inquiry or consideration, embodied it in amendments to the Queen's Speech. All while it way be roundly asserted that if the British were to invest a Burmese prince with the sovereignty of Upper Burma and then to; leave the country, a devastating civil war between the rival princes and brigands would soon force on a second war, a second deportation, and a second military occupation at a vast expense of blood and treasure and a final annexation. British Radicals at Home profess to regret the annexation of Burma on the ground that the Native population have shown by their active hostility to the British invaders that they have no desire to live under British rule. All this is manifestly false and absurd in the eyes of those who are familiar with the past relations between Upper and Lower Burma. The masses of the population of Upper Burma have long appreciated the protection and security that might be enjoyed under British administration. As long ago as the last century, many refugees from Burmese oppression made their escape into Bengal; and the arrogant demand of the Burmese Government for the surrender of these wretched fugitives was followed by raids which culminated in the first Burmese war.

When peace was restored and British rule was established in the provinces acquired as the result of the war, there was a renewal of the old immigrations into British territory, and these immigrations would have been on a much larger scale, but for the stringent orders of successive Kings of Burma to arrest all Burmeses subjects who attempted to cross the frontier. The condition of the masses of the people of Upper Burma since annexation at the beginning of the year might be better understood by reference to the attitude of the masses of the population of the province of Oudh during the Mutinies of 1857-58. The British Government had taken possession of Oudh, but had been unable to protect the people. The talukdars were in rebellion, the countries were bristling with fortresses, and the British were shut up in the Residency at Lucknow. Accordingly the bulk of the cultivators, who had been invested with proprietory rights in the lands under the new revenue settlement, deserted their benefactors and took refuge in the fortresses of their so-called tyrants, the rebel talukdars. When, however, the talukdars submitted to their several villages, and accepted without further demur the administration of British rulers. When once the rebel princes and their gang are rooted out of Burma, the general population will become as reconciled to the new order of things and as industrious and peaceful as the people of Oudh, and we are satisfied that they will prove infinitely more enterprising. For the present they may often afford shelter and refuge to the rebels, and probably pay them blackmail, not from any real sympathy with rebel pretensions, but simply from fear of the brigands and the absence of British protection. Hitherto the desired pacification has been delayed by the climate—by the extreme heat followed by the heavy rains. But in October next the country will be open to Ruropean soldiers; and before the following March we may expect to hear that Upper Burma has been cleared of the brigands, and that the cultivators, t

"FURTHER INFORMATION."

("Lord Dufferin's Staff don't kiss."—Pioneer, Sept. 23.)

"And don't they really kiss you?" No!
They'd blush if you asked them—ever so!
At the slightest mention of social slips
They turn clear pink to the finger-tips.
Why, anything verging on innocent chaff
Would shock the whole of Lord Dufferin's staff;
That solemn and serious staff.

"And pray, and what do the gentlemen drink?"
From whiskey they fly and from "Simkin" shrink;
But toast and water they merrily quaff,
For this is the way of Lord Dufferin's staff;
His rigidly temperate staff.

"And don't they dance?" They think it wrong, And wholly unfitting an aide-de-cong; 'Tis all you can do to raise a laugh, Much less a waltz from Lord Dufferin's staff, That solemn and serious staff.

From six in the morning till ten at night,
The study of tongues is their sole delight;
And the Munshi drones over gain and kaf
To that ocean of learning, Lord Dufferin's staff;
His crushingly erudite staff.

They wear their jack-spurs wrong side up.
They always walk with their eyes on the ground,
They call P-l-t-i's the "Devil's Pound."
And frequently speak of balls and dinners
As traps for the souls of benighted sinners.
"The lusts of the flesh are dross and draff."
Say the whole of this verily Christian staff,
This painfully virtuous staff.

They take no stocks in the legs of a horse.
And the smoky din of a lottery night
Is rank perdition in their sight.
In fact, they are all too good by half
For this frivolous world, are Lord Dufferin's staff;
This rigidly temperate, solemn and serious,
Prudish and passionate staff.
